PREFACE.

Several years ago on looking up the literature pertaining to the earlier Sufi poets of Persia, I found that there was no European edition or translation nor even any extended account of the contents of any of the works of Sanā'ī. Considering the reputation of this author, and the importance of his writings for the history of Sufism, the omission was remarkable and I was encouraged by Dr. E. D. Ross, Principal of the Calcutta Madrasah to do something towards filling up the blank. The present volume is an attempt at a presentation of a part of Sanā'ī's most famous work, which it is hoped may serve to give an idea of his manner of thought not only to Oriental scholars but also to non-Orientalists who may be interested in the mysticism of Persia.

MSS of Sanā'ī Ḥudūd are not rare in European libraries and a selection of those contained in the British Museum and India Office libraries furnished me with as many as I was able to collate during the time I could devote to this work on the occasion of a recent furlough. My selection of MSS for collation was I must confess, somewhat arbitrary. C I took because it was the oldest of those to which I had access. H because it also was of respectable age and fairly well written. M mainly on account of its being easily legible, this being a consideration since my time in London was limited and the British Museum does not allow MSS to leave the building. I I took because it was written in Isfahān and so might embody a Persian as distinct from an Indian, tradition of the text, and A was selected because it was stated to be 'Abdu'l Latīf's autograph of his revision of the text. I must here acknowledge my gratitude to the management of the India Office Library for the permission accorded me to take away these two valuable MSS for collation in the country the materials upon which the present text is based would otherwise have been much poorer, and the result even more inconclusive than it is.

Though thus in some degree arbitrary and restricted to only two collections, I do not think a limited choice of MSS could have turned out much more fortunately. It has at least, I think, brought a considerable amount of light to bear on the history of the author's text, especially with regard to the labours of its editor 'Abdu'l Latîf in the seventeenth century, though, as explained in the Introduction, I am very far from imagining that we have arrived at any close approximation to the author's original. I do not say that a reconstruction of Sanâ'i's original text is impossible though judging merely from the MSS. I have examined I am inclined to doubt the possibility. The text fell into confusion at a very early date, and it will perhaps only be by prolonged search or by a lucky chance that a future editor will obtain a copy which approximates in any close degree to the original, though a closer and more prolonged study of the copies we possess would I have no doubt, give indications as to the place of many lines and passages which in the present edition are almost certainly wrongly placed or have been set apart as homeless. But at the present stage of Oriental studies it is unprofitable to devote to the preparation of a text the same prolonged research which we are accustomed to see in editions of the classical authors of Greece and Rome and the labour of scholars in the province of Oriental letters is better expended on a first rough survey of the ground, so much of which remains as yet absolutely unknown. When a general knowledge of the whole has been obtained it will be time to return for a thorough cultivation of each individual plot.

In the list of the variant readings I have found it quite impossible to indicate the different order of the lines and sections in the several MSS, nor have I as a rule given the variations in the titles of the sections. Otherwise the list is complete.

The translation is as literal as I have been able to make it. The notes are largely taken from the commentaries of 'Abdu'l Latîf, published along with the text in the Lucknow lithograph (L) and of 'Alâu'd Dîn, similarly given in the lithograph (B) which I obtained from Bombay. I have utilized all such portions of these commentaries as appeared to me to be helpful in arriving at an understanding of the text, matter taken from the commentary in the Lucknow lithograph I have distinguished by the letter L, also used in the list of variants to denote the readings of this lithograph, similarly the matter of 'Alâu'd-Dîn's commentary is distinguished in the notes by the letter B. Where the note presents a literal translation of the commentaries, I have indicated this by the use of inverted commas where my note gives only the general sense of the commentary I have omitted the quotation marks, the source of the note being sufficiently indicated by the appropriate letter

In the fuller explanation of the technicalities of Sufi philosophy I have drawn largely on the first volume of the late E J W Gibb's "History of Ottoman Poetry," and especially on the second chapter of that work where allusions to proper names, etc., are not explained by the commentators, I have often quoted from Hughes's "Dictionary of Islam." Quotations from the Qur'ān I have usually given in Palmer's translation. Finally, I am myself responsible for the notes in cases where no source is given, these are usually either in places where the meaning of the text is not easy to grasp, and where nevertheless the commentators, as not infrequently happens, pass over the line without explanation, or on the other hand such notes refer to matters of common knowledge to Persian scholars which however may not be familiar to others, I have added a certain number of such in order as stated already to render the work of some use to non-Persianists who take an interest in the philosophies of the East.

Had I been able to devote myself continuously to the work the number of references from one part of the text to another might have been considerably increased, and the author's meaning probably in many places thus rendered clearer, I think also as I have already said, lines and passages that are here doubtless misplaced might have found if not their original, still a more suitable home. But it has often happened that months, in one case as many as eleven have elapsed between putting down the work and taking it up again, and thus all but the most general remembrance of the contents of the earlier parts of the text has in the meanwhile escaped me. I can only say that it seemed better to let the work go out as it is than to keep it longer in the hope of obtaining a continuous period of leisure which may never come, for a more thorough revision and recasting of the whole.

I —LIFE OF THE AUTHOR

Abū'l Majd Majdūd b Ādam Sanā'ī¹ was born at Ghazna, and lived in the reign of Bahramshāh (A H 512-548, A D 1118-1152) Ouseley says of him that he “ while yet young became one of the most learned, devout and excellent men of the age which he adorned His praise was on every tongue for, in addition to his accomplishments in the Sūfī philosophy, he possessed a kind and benevolent heart delightful manners and a fine taste for poetry Sanāī in early life retired from the world and its enjoyments, and the reason for his doing so is supposed to have arisen from the following circumstance

“ He had frequented the courts of kings and princes, and celebrated their virtue and generous actions When Sultan Ibrahim of Ghazni determined upon attacking the infidel idolaters of India, Hakim Sanāī composed a poem in his praise, and was hurrying to the court to present it before that monarch's departure There was at that time in Ghazni a madman known as Lāi Khūr (the ox eater), who often in his incoherent wanderings uttered sentiments and observations worthy of a sounder head piece, he was addicted to drinking wine, and frequented the bath It so happened that Sanāī, in passing a garden, heard the notes of a song, and stopped to listen After some time the singer, who was Lai Khūr, addressing the cup-bearer,

¹ For the facts contained in the following sketch I am indebted to Sir Gore Ouseley's Biographical Notices of the Persian Poets Lond Or Trans Fund 1846 Rieu's and Ethé's Catalogues and Prof Browne's A Literary History of Persia Vol II

said, ' Saki, fill a bumper, that I may drink to the blindness of our Sultan, Ibrahim ' The Saki remonstrated and said it was wrong to wish that so just a king should become blind The madman answered that he deserved blindness for his folly in leaving so fine a city as Ghazni, which required his presence and care, to go on a fool's errand in such a severe winter Lāi Khūr then ordered the Saki to fill another cup, that he might drink to the blindness of Hakim Sanāi The cup-bearer still more strongly remonstrated against this, urging the universally esteemed character of the poet, whom everyone loved and respected The madman contended that Sanāi merited the malediction even more than the king, for with all his science and learning he yet appeared ignorant of the purposes for which the Almighty had created him, and when he shortly came before his Maker, and was asked what he brought with him he could only produce panegyrics on kings and princes,—mortals like himself These words made so deep an impression on the sensitive mind of the pious philosopher, that he secluded himself from the world forthwith and gave up all the luxuries and vanities of courts

' Sirājuddin Ali in his ' Memoirs of the Poets ' says that in consequence of the sudden impression occasioned by Lāi Khūr's remarks, Sanāi sought instruction from the celebrated Sheikh Yusef Hamdani, whose cell was called the Kaabah of Khorāsān '

It was about this time that Behrām Shāh offered him his sister in marriage, which honour however he gratefully declined, and almost immediately set out on a pilgrimage to Mecca and Medinah It is to the refusal of the royal bride that he alludes in his Hedikeh as an apology to the king, in the following lines —' I am not a person desirous of gold or of a wife, or of exalted station by my God I neither seek them nor wish them If through thy grace and favour thou wouldest even offer me thy crown, I swear by thy head I should not accept it ' ' ' The account of Sanā'i's conversion contained in the foregoing extract is probably as Browne says, of little historical value

Sanā'i composed the present work after his return from the pilgrimage according to most copies he completed it in A H 525 (A D 1131), though some MSS have A H 534 or 535 (A D 1139-1141)

Sanā'i was attacked during his lifetime on account of his alleged unorthodoxy, but a fatwa was published by the Khalifa's court at

Baghdād, vindicating his orthodoxy against his calumniators His commentator 'Abdu'l Laṭīf in his Preface (v post) mentions the suspicions of the various sects on the subject of the Ḥakīm's heresies

Several dates are given for the Ḥakīm's death His disciple Muhammad b 'Alī al Raffā (Raqqām), in a preface to the work preserved in one of the Bodleian MSS, gives Sunday, the 11th Sha'bān A H 525 (A D 1131) This date, however, fell on a Thursday, the 11th Sha'bān of the year A H 545 (A D 1150), which is the date given by Taqī Kāshī and the Ālāshkade, was, however, a Sunday Daulat-shāh and Hājī Ḥalfā give A H 576 (A D 1180, 1181) Since the poet completed his Tarīqu't-Tahqīq in A H 528, the earliest of the three dates is impossible, the second would appear to be the most probable

Besides the Hadīqatu'l-Haqīqat, the first chapter of which is here presented, Sanā'ī wrote the Tarīqu't-Tahqīq ("Path of Verification") Ḡharīb nāma ('Book of the Stranger'), Sayru'l-'ibād ila'l-Ma'ād ("Pilgrimage of [God's] servants to the Hereafter"), Kār nāma ('Book of Deeds'), 'Ishq-nāma ("Book of Love"), and Aql nāma ('Book of Reason') as well as a Dīwān, or collection of shorter poems in various metres All these works, with the exception of the Hadīqa and the Dīwān, are said by Prof Browne, from whom the above list is taken, to be very rare

II — MANUSCRIPTS AND LITHOGRAPHS

I have used the following manuscripts and lithographs in the preparation of the text —

(1) Br Mus Add 25329 Foll 298, 7 $\frac{1}{4}$ " x 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ ", 15 ll 2 $\frac{3}{8}$ " long, in small Nestalīk, with gold headings, dated Safar A H 890 (A D 1485) [Adam Clarke]

There are marginal additions by two other hands, f 1 is on different paper, by a different and later hand The letters ج ج ج are often not distinguished, چ never, د and پ are often not distinguished from د and پ, the small letters are often without dots, the scribe usually writes the modern undotted س with three dots below There are large omissions as compared with later MSS and the lithographs

I denote this MS by C

(2) Br Mus Or 358 Foll 317, $6\frac{1}{2}" \times 3\frac{1}{2}"$, 17 ll 2" long, in small Nasta'lik in two gold ruled columns, with two 'unvāns, apparently written in the 16th cent [Geo Wm Hamilton]

There are many marginal additions, mostly by one, a later, hand, the MS as a whole has been subjected to a great many erasures and corrections. The writing is good, the pointing of the letters fairly complete, the scribe usually writes ج and ب , the س rarely appears with three dots below. The MS contains the prefaces of Raqqām and of Sanā'i himself but, like the preceding shows omissions as compared with later MSS and the lithographs.

I denote this MS by H

(3) Br Mus Add 16777 Foll 386, $10\frac{1}{2}" \times 6\frac{1}{2}"$, 15 ll, $3\frac{1}{2}"$ long, in fair Nasta'lik, with gold ruled margins dated A H 1076 (A D 1665) [Wm Yule]

This is a clearly written MS the pointing of the letters usually full, ج and ب are frequently distinguished by their dots and the pure س usually written with three dots below. Erasures are not frequent the marginal corrections usually by the original hand. This MS gives a very large number of divergent readings as compared with the others: its order is very different from that of the others it is, as regards its extent, not so much defective as redundant long passages appearing twice and some passages not to be found in any of my other sources are also included. Some of these latter I have found in subsequent chapters of the Hadīqa, and it is possible that a more thorough search might have shown that they are all contained there.

This MS is denoted by M

(4) Ind Off 918 Ff 395, 2 coll each ll 15 Nasta'lik the last four pp written by another hand $9\frac{1}{2}" \times 5\frac{1}{2}"$ Written at Isfahān A H 1027 (A D 1618), occasional short glosses on the margin.

A clearly written and well preserved MS, closely related to the following. The letters ب and ج are frequently distinguished the sign madda is usually omitted.

I denote this MS by I

(5) Ind Off 923 The description given in the Catalogue is as follows — "Sharḥ-i Hadīkah The revised and collated edition of Sana'i's Hadīkah with a commentary and marginal glosses by 'Abd allatīf bin 'Abdallāh al 'Abbāsī, who is best known by his revised and annotated edition of Jalal aldin Rumi's Mathnawī, his commentaries on the same poem, and a special glossary, Lata'if allughât (lithogr Lucknow under title Farhang-i Mathnawī 1877) He died 1048 or 1049 (A D 1638, 1639) in Shahjahan's reign The present copy, which is the author's autograph, was finished by him 20th Jumada alawwal A H 1044 (=Nov 11th, 1634), and represents an abridgement from a larger commentary of his, the Lata'if al Hada'ik, from which also the glosses are taken (marked ^h) According to the dibaca he began the larger work 1040 and completed it 1042 (1630-33) supported by his friend Mir 'Imad aldin Mahmud al Hamadani, with the takhallus Ilahi, the author of the well known tadhkirah of Persian poets the Khazina-i Ganj "

The following is an account of the contents of this MS First comes a short preface by 'Abdu'l Laṭīf introducing Sanā'ī's own preface which is stated to have been written to the complete collection of his writings it is frequently, states 'Abdu'l Laṭīf not to be found in copies of his works After Sanā'ī's preface comes another, called Rāsta-i khuyābān, by 'Abdu'l Laṭīf described as a short preface to this writer's commentary this concludes with a reference to Ilāhī and his share in the work and two tārīkh's by Ilāhī giving A H 1040 as the date of its commencement and 1042 as that of its completion A few more lines by 'Abdu'l Laṭīf introduce the work itself The original numbering of the folia commences with the text there is also a pencil numbering in English characters beginning with the first preface The poem closes with 59 verses in the same metre which form an address to Abū'l Hasan 'Alī b Nāsir al Ḥaznawī named Biryāngar sent to him at Baghdād because of the accusations of the traducers of the book The date of completion of the text is given as A H 535 and in a triangular enclosure of gold lines, it is stated that "this honoured copy was completed 20th Jumādā al awwal, 1044 A H" A few pages at the end, written by the same hand give an account of how the book was sent to Biryāngar at Baghdād on account of the accusations that were brought against it how it was found to be orthodox and a reply sent to Ḥaznī

This MS I denote by A

(6) The Lucknow lithograph published by the Newal Kishore Press dated A H 1304 (A D 1886) This is an edition of the whole work, including prefaces and 'Abdu'l Latîf's commentary. It comprises 860 pp., of 15 verses to a page the paper as usual, is somewhat inferior the text is on the whole easily legible but the same can not always be said for the commentary, written in the margins and in a much smaller hand. It contains first a list of the titles of all the sections of all the chapters, followed by some verses setting forth the subjects of the ten chapters each as a whole. The ornamental title-page follows stating that the Ḥaḍīqa of Sanā'ī is here accompanied by the commentary Latā'ifu'l-Ḥadā'iq of 'Abdu'l Latîf al-'Abbāsī. On p. 2 begins the 'First Preface' called Mivrātu'l Ḥadā'iq, by 'Abdu'l Latîf dated 1038 A. H. this is not included in A, an abstract of it is given later (v p. xxi). After this comes Sanā'ī's preface with 'Abdu'l Latîf's introductory words as in A this is called the Second Preface. The Third Preface' which is 'Abdu'l Latîf's Rāsta-ī khayābān, is here written in the margins of the Second Preface. Then comes the text with marginal commentary introduced as in A by a few more words from 'Abdu'l Latîf. At the conclusion of the work is the address to Bīrvāngar and finally some qit'as on the dates of commencement and completion of the printing of the book.

I denote this lithograph by L.

(7) I obtained from Bombay from the bookshop of Mirzā Muḥammad Shīrāzī, another lithograph which comprises only the first chapter of the work accompanied by a copious marginal commentary. Pp. 15+4+31+188 15 ll. to a page, published at Lūhārū (near Hissar Punjab) 1290 A. H. (1873 A. D.). The title-page states that this is the commentary on Sanā'ī's Ḥaḍīqa by Nawāb Mirzā 'Alā'u'd Dīn Ahmad Khān Bahādur chief (ورمان ورمای) of Lūhārū, called Alā'ī, the scribe being Maulavī Muhammad Ruknu'd Dīn of Hissar. Ruknu'd Dīn states (p. 2) that he himself was doubtful of many words, and did not understand a number of the verses he took his difficulties to 'Alā'ī, who explained all and "Praise be to God, there never has been such a commentator of the Ḥaḍīqa, nor will be or if there is, it will be an imitation or a theft from this king of commentators." This reads rather curiously when considered in connection with the fact to be mentioned hereafter, that the authors have incorporated in their commentary the whole of that of 'Abdu'l Latîf and that their original contributions to the elucidation of the text are of slight value Ruknu'd Dīn was asked one day by the printers (کار کتاب مطبع) to bring them his copy (کاپی) of the Hadīqa on its completion, for printing and publication Pp 4—10 are occupied by an Arabic preface by Ruknu'd Dīn, again in extravagant praise of 'Alā'ī and his accomplishments as a commentator There follows (pp 11—14) another title-page, and a short poem by 'Alā'ī, and then (p 15) a qit'a, giving the dates of commencement and completion of the work Four pages of introduction (pp 1—4) follow, and again with separate paging 31 pp of commentary on the first 28 pp of the text the reason apparently being that the whole of the commentary on these pages could not conveniently be written in the margins The text comprises 186 pp and includes (though I cannot find this stated anywhere) only the first book of the complete Hadīqa, the volume is concluded by some lines of Alā'ī in praise of Muhammad and a benediction At the end of the marginal notes on every page is written "'Alā'ī sallamahu" or 'Maulānā Alā'ī sallamahu Allāhu ta āla'

III — HISTORY OF THE TEXT

Muhammad b Ali Raqqam informs us in his preface to the Hadīqa, that while Sanā'ī was yet engaged in its composition some portions were abstracted and divulged by certain ill disposed persons Further Abdu'l Latif in his preface the Mirātu'l-Hadā'iq states that the disciples of Sana'ī made many different arrangements of the text each one arranging the matter for himself and making his own copy and that thus there came into existence many and various arrangements, and two copies agreeing together could not be found

The confusion into which the text thus fell is illustrated to some extent by the MSS which I have examined for the purpose of this edition C shows many omissions as compared with later MSS, at the same time there is a lengthy passage, 38 verses which is not found in any other, H, though also defective, is fuller than C but evidently belongs to the same family M contains almost all the matter comprised in Abdu'l-Latif's recension, much of it twice over as has already been mentioned and in addition about 300 verses, or altogether 10 folia, which apparently do not of right belong to this first chapter at all the first chapter, too, is here divided into two chapters. The remaining MSS and lithographs agree closely with each other and are evidently all nearly related.

The same story, of an early confusion of the text, is even more strikingly brought out if, instead of the omissions and varying extent of the text in the several MSS we compare the order of the text. Here M startles us by giving us an order totally at variance with that of any other of our sources. There seems to be no reason for this: the arrangement of the subject is not certainly more logical and it would appear that the confusion has simply been due to carelessness at some early stage of the history of the text: the repetitions and the inclusions of later parts of the work, point to the same explanation. I need only mention the consequent labour and expenditure of time on the collation of this manuscript. C and H agree mostly between themselves in the order of the text and broadly speaking the general order is the same as that of the later MSS: the divergences would no doubt have appeared considerable but that they are entirely overshadowed by the confusion exhibited by M. IALB agree closely with each other as before.

The same confusion is again seen in the titles of the various sections as given in the several MSS. I am inclined to doubt how far any of the titles are to be considered as original and it seems to me very possible that all are later additions and that the original poem was written as one continuous whole not divided up into short sections as we have it now. At any rate the titles vary very much in the different MSS: some I should say, were obviously marginal glosses transferred to serve as headings; in other cases the title has reference only to the first few lines of the section, and is quite inapplicable to the subject-matter of the bulk of the section; in other cases again it is difficult to see any applicability whatever. It appears to have been the habit of the copyists to leave spaces for the titles which were filled in later: in some cases this has never been done; in others, through some omission in the series, each one of a number of sections will be denoted by a title which corresponds to that of the next following section in other MSS.

It is then obvious that 'Abdu'l Latif is right in saying that in the centuries following Sanā'i's death great confusion existed in the text of the Ḥadīqa. This text he claims to have purified and restored, as well as explained by means of his commentary, and it is his recension which is given in A, as well as in the Indian lithographs Land B. He says that he heard that the Nawāb Mirzā Muḥammad ‘Azīz Kaukīl tāsh, styled the Great Khān, had, while governor of Gujrāt in the year 1000 A H, sent to the town of Ghaznī a large sum of money in order to obtain from the tomb of Sanā’ī a correct copy of the Ḥadīqa, written in an ancient hand, this copy the Nawāb, on his departure on the pilgrimage had bestowed on the Amīr ‘Abdu’r Razzāq Ma’mūrī, styled Muẓaffar Khān, at that time viceroy of that country. ‘Abdu’l Laṭīf, however, being then occupied in journeys in various parts of India, could not for some time present himself before the Amīr till in A H 1035 this chief came to Agra, where ‘Abdu’l Laṭīf presented himself before him and obtained the desire of so many years. This MS of the Ḥadīqa had been written only 80 years after the original composition but the text did not satisfy the editor, and it was besides deficient both in verses here and there, and also as regards twenty leaves in the middle of the work.

In the year A H 1037 ‘Abdu’l Laṭīf came to Lahore where having some freedom from the counterfeit affairs of the world and the deceitful cares of this life he entered again on the task of editing the text with the help of numerous copies supplied to him by learned and critical friends. He adopted the order of the ancient MS before mentioned, and added thereto such other verses as he found in the later MSS which appeared to be of common origin, and to harmonize in style and dignity and doctrine, with the text. As to what ‘Abdu’l Laṭīf attempted in his commentary, v p xxii post.

So far ‘Abdu’l Laṭīf’s own account of his work. We can, however, supplement this by a number of conclusions derived from the MSS themselves.

In the first place, it appears that A is not as stated in the India Office Catalogue, ‘Abdu’l Laṭīf’s autograph copy. The statement that it is so is apparently based on the fact of the occurrence of the words “harrarahu wa sawwadahū Abdu’l-Laṭīf b ‘Abdu’lḥāhī’-‘Abbāsī,” at the end of the editor’s few words of introduction to Sanā’ī’s preface, and again of the occurrence of the words “harrarahu ‘Abdu’l-Laṭīf kī shārik wa musakkik īn kitāb-i marmunāt-nisāb ast,” at the end of the few lines of introduction immediately preceding the text. But both these sentences are found in the

Lucknow lithograph, and therefore must have been copied in all the intermediate MSS from 'Abdu'l Latif's autograph downwards the words in each case refer only to the paragraph to which they are appended, and were added solely to distinguish these from Sana'i's own writings

I cannot find any other facts in favour of the statement that A is the editor's autograph, there are however, many against it. Thus A is beautifully written and is evidently the work of a skilled professional scribe not of a man of affairs and a traveller, which 'Abdu'l Latif represents himself as having been. Again there are occasional explanatory glosses to the commentary in the original hand these would have been unnecessary had the scribe been himself the author of the commentary. The handwriting is quite modern in character and the pointing is according to modern standards throughout the late date of A is immediately brought out clearly by comparing it with I (of date 1027 A H) or M (of date 1076 A H) though the supposed date of A is 1044 A H it is obviously much later than either of the others. But perhaps the most curious bit of evidence is the following, at the top of fol. 11b of the text of A there is an erasure in which is written و in place of an original reading و, and as it happens this line is one which has been commented on by the editor in the margin is a note in a recent hand — را اکثر اسع بحای را او نوشته شده — و شرحی به مولوی کرده بد آن مربوط تر است والله اعلم, which is true, — the commentary certainly presumes a reading و but this MS had originally و the scribe could not therefore have been the commentator himself, i.e. 'Abdu'l Latif

Further, not only is A not 'Abdu'l Latif's autograph, but it does not accurately reproduce that autograph. I refer to 34 short passages of Sana'i's text which in A are found as additions in the margin, these, though obviously written in the same hand, I regard as subsequent additions from another source by the same scribe, not as careless omissions filled in afterwards on comparing the copy with the original. In the first place, the scribe was on the whole a careful writer, and the mistakes he has made in transcribing the commentary apart from the text, are few. The omissions of words or passages of commentary, which have been filled in afterwards, are altogether 10, of these, two are of single words only, two are on the first page, when perhaps the copyist had not thoroughly settled down to his work, five are short passages, no doubt due to carelessness, and one is a longer passage, the whole of a comment on a certain verse,—an example of carelessness certainly, but explicable by supposing that the scribe had overlooked the reference number in the text indicating that the comment was to be introduced in relation to that particular verse. Roughly speaking the commentary is of about equal bulk with the text, yet the omissions of portions of commentary by the copyist are thus many fewer in number and much less in their united extent than the omissions of the text—supposing, that is that the marginal additions to the text in A are merely the consequence of careless copying. The reverse would be expected since owing to the manner of writing, it is easier to catch up the place where one has got to in a verse composition, it would seem therefore as said above, that the comparatively numerous marginal additions to the text are rather additions introduced afterwards from another source than merely careless omissions in copying. In the second place none of these 34 passages are annotated by 'Abdu l Latif, in all likelihood, if they had formed part of his text, some one or more of the lines would have received a comment. The passages comprise, together, 63 verses: there is only one instance in the First chapter of the Hadîqa of a longer consecutive passage without annotation, and in general it is rare (eleven instances only) to find more than 30 consecutive verses without annotation, usually the editor's comments occur to the number of two, three or more on each page of 15 lines. I think, therefore it must be admitted that the chances would be much against a number of casual omissions aggregating 63 lines falling out so as not to include a single comment of the editor. Thirdly it is a remarkable fact that of these 34 passages the great majority are also omitted in both C and H while they are present in both M and I: to particularize, C omits 30½, H omits 28, both C and H omit 25½, and either C or H or both omit every one of these 34 passages, while I and M each have all the 34 with one exception in each case, further, while many of these 34 marginally added passages in A correspond exactly to omissions in H, the corresponding omissions in C may be more extensive, i.e., may include more in each case, of the neighbouring text.

We must therefore, I think, conclude that after completing the transcription of A the scribe obtained a copy of the Hadîqa of the type of I or M, and filled in certain additions therefrom, and that 'Abdu'l Latif's edition did not originally contain these passages

Let us turn to a consideration of I and its relation to 'Abdu'l Latif's edition I is dated A H 1027, it is, therefore, earlier than 'Abdu'l Latif's edition of A H 1044 As we have seen A is not Abdu'l Latif's autograph, but we have, I think, no reason to doubt that it was either copied from that autograph, or at any rate stands in the direct line of descent, so much seems to be attested by the occurrence of the words "harrarahu 'Abdu'l-Latif", and by the inscription at the end as to the completion of the book in A H 1044, the actual date of the completion of 'Abdu'l Latif's work Regarding, then, A as presenting us (with the exception of the marginally added passages) with a practically faithful copy of 'Abdu'l Latif's own text, we notice a striking correspondence between this text and that of I As to the general agreement of the readings of the two texts, a glance at the list of variants will be sufficient and it is not impossible to find whole pages without a single difference of any importance The titles also, which as a rule vary so much in the different MSS, correspond closely throughout The order of the sections is the same throughout, and the order of the lines within each section, which is also very variable in the various MSS, corresponds in I and A with startling closeness The actual spellings of individual words also, which vary even in the same MS, are frequently the same in I and A for example, at the bottom of p ۲۱ of the present text the word کر or کزی occurs three times within a few lines The word may also be written کجی, کجی, thus while C and M have کزی, H has first کج and then twice کزی, I however has first کر and then twice کجی and this is exactly repeated in A Another example occurs a few lines afterwards (p ۲۲, l ۶), the reading is مار شکج, mār : shikanj, mār being followed by the ۱۷fat this I writes as مارى شکج, in A an erasure occurs between مار and شکج, doubtless due to the removal of a ی originally written there as in I

The above will serve to show the close relation between I and A or between I and 'Abdu'l Latif's autograph, of which A is a copy or descendant But, however close this relationship, 'Abdu'l Latif cannot actually have used I in the preparation of his revision of the text, or he would certainly have incorporated many of the 34 passages before alluded to, which are all, with one exception, contained in I. These, we have seen, were only added by the scribe of A, and by him only subsequently, from another source, after he had completed his transcription from 'Abdu'l Latif's autograph.

The facts, then, are these. There was in existence, before 'Abdu'l Latif's time, a tradition, probably Persian, of the order of the text, which he adopted even in detail. This is represented for us by I, written A H 1027 at Isfahān, but I itself is somewhat fuller than the copy of which 'Abdu'l Latif made such great use. This copy may be called P. Such use, indeed, did 'Abdu'l Latif make of P, that, so far as can be seen, it is only necessary that he should have had P before him, with one or two other copies from which he derived a certain number of variant readings, which he substituted here and there in his own edition for those of P.

We have now brought down the history of the text to A H 1044. Not much remains to be said, A, as we have seen, is quite possibly a direct copy of 'Abdu'l Latif's autograph, with, however, marginal additions from another source. This other source might be at once assumed to be I, but for the fact that only 33 out of the 34 marginally added passages occur in I, and it still seems to me at least possible that I was thus used. I, though written at Isfahān, was probably by this time in India, where A, the so-called 'Tippu MS,' was certainly written, at least, that I did come to India may be assumed from its presence in the India Office Library. Again though it is I think, impossible that the whole of the 34 passages added marginally in A should have been careless omissions of the copyist, one or two might possibly be so, and it is possible that the single line now under discussion may be such an omission, filled in from the scribe's original not from another source. Finally it is of course always possible that the additions were taken from two sources, not one only, i.e., that while perhaps even 33 were filled in after comparison with I the single remaining line may have been derived from elsewhere. Though absent in C, it is present in both H and M.

As to the lithographs, both are obviously descendants of A.

The above conclusions may be summarized in the following stemma codicum

The present text is founded on that of the Lucknow lithograph L, with which have been collated the other texts mentioned above. L is practically a verbatim copy of A, the value of which has been discussed above. Though MSS of the Hadīqa are not rare, at least in European libraries, I have not met with any in India, and a considerable portion of the first draft of the translation and notes was done on the basis of L and B alone. The Hadīqa is not in any case an easy book, with the exception, perhaps, of a number of the anecdotes which are scattered through it, and it was rendered far more difficult by the fact, which I did not recognize for some time, that a very great amount of confusion exists even in the text as it is published to-day, in the lithographs descended from 'Abdu'l Latīf's recension. There appeared to be frequently no logical connection whatever between successive verses, whole pages appeared to consist of detached sayings, the very meaning of which was frequently obscure, a subject would be taken up only to be dropped immediately I ultimately became convinced that the whole work had fallen into confusion, and that the only way of producing any result of value would be to rearrange it. Thus I had done, tentatively, for part of the work, before collating the British Museum and India Office MSS cited above.

When I came to examine the MSS, the wide variations, not only in the general order of the sections to which allusion has already been made, but in the order of the verses within each section, showed me that probably no MS at the present day, or at any rate none of those examined by me retains the original order of the author and I felt justified in proceeding as I had begun, altering the order of the lines, and even of the sections, if by so doing a meaning or a logical connection could be brought out. I need not say that the present edition has no claims to represent Sanā'i's original, probably it does not represent it even approximately. In some cases there is, I think, no doubt that I have been able to restore the original order of the lines, and so to make sense where before it was wanting, in other cases this is possible, but I feel less confident, while in still others the reconstruction, preferable though I believe it to be to the order as found in any single MS, is nevertheless almost certainly a makeshift, and far from the original order. Lastly it will be seen that I have quite failed, in a number of instances, to find the context of short passages or single lines, it seemed impossible to allow them to stand in the places they occupied in any of the MSS, and I have, therefore, simply collected them together or in the case of single lines given them in the notes.

IV — THE COMMENTATORS

Khwāja 'Abdu'l Latîf b 'Abdullāh al 'Abbāsī, already so frequently mentioned, explains to us in his Preface, the Mawāṭi'-'Ḥadā'iq, what he has attempted in his commentary on the Ḥadīqa. He states that he was writing in A H 1038, in the second year of the reign of the Emperor Shāhjahān, that he had already completed his work on Jalālu'd-Dīn Rūmī's Mathnawī, and that he had in A H 1037 settled down to work on the Ḥadīqa. What he professes to have done for the text of that work has been mentioned in the last section, the objects he has aimed at in the way of commentary and explanation are the following —

Firstly, he has followed up the references to passages in the Qur'ān, has given these passages with their translations, and a statement of the sūra in which they are to be found. Secondly, the traditions referred to are also quoted. Thirdly, obscure passages have been annotated and strange or curious Arabic and Persian words have been explained after an investigation into their meanings in trustworthy books. Fourthly, certain signs have been used in transcribing the text in order to fix the signification of various letters: thus the yā' khitābī is denoted by ح subscript, the yā' maḥlūl similarly by مع, the yā' ma'rūf by ع, the Persian ك (ک) by ف, the Arabic ك by گ, and so on. Again the vocalization has been attended to in words which are often mispronounced: thus ignorant people often substitute fatha for kasra in such words as 'khizāna', of which the Qāmūs says "Khizāna is never pronounced with fatha", 'Shamāl', meaning the North wind, should be pronounced with fatha, not kasra, as is often done. The āfat, jazm and other orthographical signs have often been written in the text and finally a glossary of the less known words has been added in the margin. Since it is inconvenient to have text and commentary separate, "in this copy the whole stability of the text has been dissolved, and the text bears the commentary along with it (این نسخه را حل کل), i.e., text and commentary are intermingled: the commentary not being written in the margin, but each annotation immediately after the word or line to which it applies. These researches the author has also written out separately, and called them 'Latā'ifu'l-Hudā'iq min Naḥā'isil-Duqā'iq'". The date is again given as A.H. 1038.

It appears then that the original form of the commentary was not that of marginal notes as it is presented in A and L, that it was completed in 1038 A.H. and, in its separate form was called the Latā'ifu'l-Hudā'iq. That this is the name of the commentary we know and possess, seems to have been the opinion of the scholar who prepared the Lucknow lithograph, which is entitled "Sanā'i's Hadīq, with the commentary Latā'ifu'l-Hudā'iq".

Besides the preface just considered, there is also another, found in both A and L, called the Rāsta-i Khayābān, written especially, it would seem, as an introduction to the commentary Latā'ifu'l-Hudā'iq. After dwelling on the unworthiness of the writer 'Abdu'l Laṭīf states that the interpretations given by him are not mere expressions of private opinion, but are derived from the best Arabic and Persian books, the emendations of the text are all derived from authentic MSS, and are in accordance with the judgment of discerning men, everything has been weighed and discussed by the learned. He does not, however, say that these explanations are the only ones, nor that he has commented on every line that to some people would seem to require it. Though his work may seem poor now while he is alive, it may grow in the esteem of men after his death. The work has been done in the intervals of worldly business, while occupied with affairs of government. There follows a lengthy eulogy of his friend Mīr 'Imādu'd Dīn Mahmūd al Hamadānī, called Ilāhī two *tārīkh*s by whom close this preface. The first tārīkh says that the work having been begun in the year 1040 all the correction and revision was completed in 1042 (ابتدا در هزار و چهل شده و بسبب تصحیح) , (و معالجه و ملاحظه من جمیع الوجوه فراع در هزار و چهل و دو حاصل آمد) , the second simply gives the date 1040.

These dates evidently cannot refer to the edition and commentary as first written since we have seen that the text and the Laiā'ifu l Hadā iq are referred to by 'Abdu'l Latīf in 1038 as having been completed. It would seem that the editor had either been at work on another revised and improved edition or, as is assumed in the India Office Catalogue (No 923), on an abridgment of his earlier work. Lastly we have the date 1041 for the completed work of which A is a copy (see description of contents of A in Section II p xi), and this seems to represent the final form of the work in which the annotations are written in the margin not, as at first intermingled in the text.

In the India Office Catalogue the series of events is interpreted somewhat differently. The commentary as it appears in A (and L, the only form apparently in which we possess it) is stated to be an abridgement from a larger commentary the Laiā'ifu l Hadā iq, according to the preface (the Catalogue states) the larger work was begun in 1040 and completed in 1042. It is with diffidence that I venture to question this presentation of the facts but A in the description of which the above statements occur does not contain the preface called Mirātu l Hadā iq and therefore presents no indication that the text and Laiā'ifu l Hadā iq had already been completed in 1038 That the work done between 1040 and 1042 consisted in the preparation of the original Latā'ifu'l-Hadā'iq is, from the statement of the Mirā'atü'l-Hadā'iq, impossible. We have seen, moreover, that the tradition in India is that the commentary as we have it, as it appears in A and L, is the Latā'ifu'l-Hadā'iq itself, and not an abridgement. I do not gather from the India Office Catalogue or elsewhere that two commentaries, a larger and a smaller, are actually in existence, there may be other evidences of their former existence of which I am ignorant, but so far merely as my own knowledge goes, I can see no reason for assuming two commentaries, and would look on the labours of 1040—1042 in the light of revision and rearrangement, a work which was perhaps only finally completed in 1044, the date given in A for the completion of the work.

Besides his work on the Hadā'iq, 'Abdu'l Latīf had previously, as has been mentioned, published a revised and annotated edition of Jalīlu'd-Dīn Rūmī's Mathnawī, commentaries on the same poem, and a special glossary, the Latā'ifu'l-Luḡhāt, lithographed at Lucknow in A D 1877 under the title Farhang-i Mathnawī. He died in 1048 or 1049 A H (A D 1638, 1639).

A general description of the volume containing the other commentary which I have used in the preparation of the notes appended to the present translation has already been given. Of the authors or author and scribe, Mirzā 'Alāu'd-Dīn Ahmad of Lūhārū, called 'Alī and Maulavī Muhammad Ruknu'd-Dīn of Hissar. I know no more than is to be gathered from their prefaces.

Their commentary is of slight value as compared with that of 'Abdu'l Latīf—that is to say, that part of it which is original. The commentary is considerably more bulky than 'Abdu'l Latīf's, perhaps between two and three times as extensive—but it includes, without one word of acknowledgment, the whole of 'Abdu'l Latīf's work. This is in the great majority of cases, reproduced verbatim, in some instances a paraphrase of 'Abdu'l Latīf's commentary has been attempted, and in certain of these it is plain that the authors did not understand the sense of what they paraphrased. Of their own work, a certain amount is superfluous, the sense of the text being immediately obvious, a certain amount is mere paraphrase of Sanā'i's words—and another portion consists in an attempt to read mystical meanings into the original in passages which, as it seems, were never intended by the author to bear them. Notwithstanding these facts, I have, as will be seen, quoted freely in my notes from their commentary, for a certain portion of their work is helpful, and moreover, it seemed to me to be of interest to give in this way a specimen of present-day Indian thought and criticism in the field of Sūfiistic philosophy. I cannot, however, leave the subject of Sanā'ī's commentators without expressing my sorrow that scholars should have existed who were not only capable of such wholesale theft, but even lauded themselves on the results of it, witness the extravagant praise of Alā'ī in Ruknu'd Din's preface, and again the words "Praise be to God! There has never been such a commentator of the Hadīqa nor will be, or if there is it will be an imitation or a theft from this king of commentators!" There is also no indication that the volume comprises only one out of ten chapters of the Hadīqa—it is everywhere implied that the complete Hadīqa is presented

V - THE RADIOACTIVE-HALOGEN

The Hadīqatū'l-Haḡīqat or the 'Enclosed Garden of the Truth' commonly called the Hadīqa is a poem of about 11,500 lines each line consists of two hemistichs each of ten or eleven syllables, the bulk therefore is equal to about 23,000 lines of English ten syllabled verse. It is composed in the metre بحر خفيف مقصور ممدس مسعت which may be represented thus —

$$\frac{1}{2} - \frac{1}{2} \mid \frac{1}{2} - \frac{1}{2} \mid \frac{1}{2} - \frac{1}{2} \mid \frac{1}{2} - \frac{1}{2} \mid \frac{1}{2} - \frac{1}{2} \mid \frac{1}{2} - \frac{1}{2}$$

The two hemistichs of each verse rhyme and the effect may therefore roughly be compared to that of English rhymed couplets with the accent falling on the first (instead of the second) syllable of the line and occasionally an additional short syllable introduced in the last foot.

The chapters of which the Hadiqa consists treat, according to a few lines of verse at the end of the table of contents in the Lucknow edition of the following subjects the First on the Praise of God, and especially on His Unity, the Second in praise of Muhammad the Third, on the Understanding, the Fourth, on Knowledge, the Fifth on Love, the Lover and the Beloved, the Sixth, on Heed lessness the Seventh, on Friends and Enemies the Eighth, on the Revolution of the Heavens, the Ninth, in praise of the Emperor Shāhjahān the Tenth, on the characters or qualities of the whole work. Thus, however, is not the actual arrangement of the work as presented in the volume itself, the first five chapters are as already given, but the Sixth concerns the Universal Soul, the Seventh is on Heedlessness, the Eighth on the Stars the Ninth on Friends and Enemies, the Tenth on many matters including the praise of the Emperor Prof Browne (Lit Hist Persia, vol II p 318) gives still another order, apparently that of an edition lithographed at Bombay in A H 1275 (A D 1859)

Sanā'ī's fame has always rested on his Hadīqa it is the best known and in the East by far the most esteemed of his works it is in virtue of this work that he forms one of the great trio of Sūfī teachers -Sanā'ī Attār, Jalālu d Dīn Rūmī. It will be of interest to compare some of the estimates that have been formed of him and of the present work in particular

In time he was the first of the three and perhaps the most cordial acknowledgment of his merits comes from his successor Jalālu d Dīn Rūmī. He says —

I left off boiling while still half cooked
Hear the full account from the Sage of Ghazna

And again—

Attār was the Spirit, Sanā'ī the two eyes

We walk in the wake of Sanā'ī and Attār

Abdu'l Laṭīf in his preface called the Mirātu l-Hadīqa enters into a somewhat lengthy comparison between Sanā'ī and Rūmī in which he is hard put to it to avoid giving any preference to one or other. It is interesting to observe how he endeavours to keep the scales even. He begins by adverting to the greater length of the Mathnawī as compared with the Hadīqa, and compares the Hadīqa to an abridgement the Mathnawī to a fully detailed account. Sanā'ī's work is the more compressed, he expresses in two or three verses what the Maulavī expresses in twenty or thirty. Abdu'l-Laṭīf therefore, as it would seem reluctantly and merely on the ground of his greater prolixity, gives the palm for eloquence to Jalālu'd Dīn

There is the most perfect accord between Sanā'ī and Rūmī, the substance of their works, indeed, is in part identical. Shall it therefore be said that Rūmī stole from Sanā'ī? He asks pardon from God for expressing the thought, with regard to beggars in the spiritual world, who own a stock in trade of trifles, bankrupts of the road of virtue and accomplishments, thus might be suspected but to accuse the treasurers of the stores of wisdom and knowledge the able natures of the kingdom of truth and allegory of plagiarism and borrowing is the height of folly and unwisdom.

With regard to style, some suppose that the verse of the Hadīqa is more elevated and dignified than the elegantly ordered language of the Mathnawī. The Hadīqa does indeed contain poetry of which one verse is a knapsack of a hundred dīwāns, nor on account of its great height, can the hand of any intelligent being's ability reach the pinnacles of its rampart and the saying--

I have spoken a saying which is a whole work is true of the Hadīqa. But if the sense and style of the Maulavī be considered, there is no room for discrimination and distinction and since Thou shalt not make a distinction between any of His prophets, to distinguish between the positions of these two masters, who may unquestionably be called prophets of religion has infidelity and error as its fruit. Who possesses the power of dividing and discriminating between milk and sugar intermingled in one vessel? Abdu'l Luṭf sums up thus, in fine thus much one may say that in sobriety the Hakīm is pre eminent and in intoxication our lord the Maulavī is superior and that sobriety is in truth the essence of intoxication, and this intoxication the essence of sobriety.

Prof Browne however places the Hadīqa on a far lower level than the Eastern authors quoted above. He says '— 'The poem is written in a halting and unattractive metre, and is in my opinion one of the dullest books in Persian, seldom rising to the level of Martin Tupper's Proverbial Philosophy, filled with fatuous truisms and pointless anecdotes, and as far inferior to the Mathnawī of Jalālu'd-Dīn Rūmī as is Robert Montgomery's Salan to Milton's Paradise Lost ' '.

It is of course true that to us, at least, the interest of the Ḥadīqa is largely historical, as being one of the early Persian text-books of the Ṣūfī philosophy and as having so largely influenced subsequent writers, especially, as we have seen, the Maulavī Jalālu'd-Dīn Rūmī. Yet I cannot but think that Prof. Browne's opinion, which is doubtless shared by other scholars as well as the neglect to which the Ḥadīqa has been exposed in the West is due not to the demerits of the original text so much as to the repellent and confused state into which the text has fallen and I would venture to hope that the present attempt at a restoration of the form and meaning of a portion of the work imperfect in the highest degree as I cannot but acknowledge it to be may still be of some slight service to its author's reputation among European Orientalists.

The first Chapter or Book of the Ḥadīqa, which is here presented comprises a little more than one sixth of the entire work. The subjects of which it treats may be briefly resumed as follows:—

After an introductory section in praise of God the author speaks of the impotence of reason for the attaining a knowledge of God of God's Unity of God as First Cause and Creator and delivers more than one attack against anthropomorphic conceptions of God (pp. 1—10). After speaking of the first steps of the ascent towards God, for which worldly wisdom is not a bad thing, with work and serenity (pp. 10—11), he devotes the next portion of the book to God as Provider, to His care for man through life the uselessness of earthly possessions, and to God as guide on the road but self must first be abandoned (pp. 11—16). A fine section on God's incomprehensibility to man might perhaps come more fittingly at an earlier stage instead of here (pp. 16—18). After overcoming self God's special favour is granted to the traveller on the path but we see crookedly and He alone knows what is best for us. He has ordered all things well, and what seems evil is so only in appearance (pp. 18—25).

The greater part of the book is really concerned with the life and experiences of the Ṣūfī, and especially with continually repeated injunctions as to abandonment of the world and of self to be dead to this world is to live in the other. Pp. 25—30 are thus concerned with poverty in this world, with loss of the self, humility, man's insignificance and God's omnipotence pp. 30—34 with the necessity of continual remembrance of God, of never living apart from Him, and again of dying to the world, death to the world leads to high position with God. There follows (pp 34—41) a series of passages on the duty of thanksgiving for God's mercies, His mercy however has its counterpart in His anger, and examples of His wrath are given, then returning again to the subject of His mercies, the author speaks of God's omniscience, and His knowledge of the wants of His servants, we must therefore trust in God for all the necessities of life, they will be given as long as life is destined to last. Two later pages (48—50) which are similarly devoted to the subject of trust in God, should probably come here. Pp 41 48 deal with the Sūfī's desire for God and his zeal in pursuing the path, various directions for the road are given, especially as regards the abandonment of the world and of self and fixing the desires on God only, union with God is the goal. The abandonment of self is again the theme of pp 50—51.

A portion of the book (pp 51—56) is curiously, here devoted to the interpretation of dreams after which the author treats of the incompatibility of the two worlds again of the abandonment of earth and self and of the attainment of the utmost degree of annihilation (pp 56—58). There follows a passage on the treatment of school-boys, a comparison with the learner on the Sūfī path and an exhortation to strive in pursuing it (pp 58—60). The next portion of the book (pp 60—67) treats of charity and gifts as a form of renunciation, of relinquishing riches for God's sake prosperity is injurious to the soul, and the world must be abandoned possessions and friends are useless and each must trust to himself each will find his deserts hereafter and receive the reward of what he has worked for here.

Pp 67—80 treat of prayer the preparation for which consists in purity of heart, humility and dependence upon God. Prayer must come from the heart the believer must be entirely absorbed in his devotions. Prayer must be humble the believer must come in poverty and perplexity, and only so can receive God's kindness. A number of addresses to God follow, prayers for help and humble supplications to God on the part of the author. A few pages (80—82) treat of God's kindness in drawing men towards himself, though His ways may appear harsh at first. The progress of the believe is described in a strain of hyperbole (pp 82—83), and this portion closes with a few sections (pp 83—86) on God's majesty and omnipotence somewhat after the manner of those in the earlier part of the book

In pp 86—97 the author speaks of the Qur'ān, and its excellence and sweetness. The letter however is not the essential: its true meaning is not to be discovered by reason alone. The Qur'ān is often dishonoured, especially by theologians, and by professional readers, who read it carelessly and without understanding it. A short section (pp 97—98) on humility and self effacement follows, and the book is brought to a close by a description of the godlessness of the world before the advent of Muhammad (pp 98—100), which serves to introduce the subject of the Second Chapter.

Though it must be admitted that the author is occasionally obscure, sometimes dull, and not infrequently prosaic, some fine sections and a larger number of short passages of great beauty are contained in this chapter, I may perhaps be permitted especially to refer to the sections "In His Magnification," pp 16—18 and "On Poverty and Perplexity," p 74, while as characteristic and on the whole favourable passages may be mentioned "On His Omniscience, and His Knowledge of the Minds of Men," pp 37—39 "On the Incompatibility of the Two Abodes," pp 56—58 "On intimate Friendship and Attachment," pp 62—63 and certain of the addresses to God contained in pp 74—77.

VI - SANĀ'I'S PREFACE

The author's Preface to the work given in A and L and occupying in the latter nearly thirteen closely printed pages, is here given in abstract. It was not, as will appear, written specially as an introduction to the Hadīqa, but to his collected works.

After an opening section in praise of God, the author introduces the tradition: When a son of Adam dies, his activity ceases except in three things, a permanent bequest, and knowledge by which men are benefited, and pious sons who invoke blessings on him after his death. Considering these words one day, and reflecting that none of the three conditions was applicable to himself, he became sorrow ful, and continued for some time in a state of grief and depression. One day while in this condition, he was visited by his friend Aḥmad b Mas'ūd, who inquired the cause of his sorrow. The author told him that, not fulfilling any one of the above conditions, he was afraid to die, possessing not one of these three advocates at court he would stand without possessions or adornment in the Presence of the Unity. His friend then began to comfort him, saying "First let me tell you a story." Sanā'i replied, "Do so."

Aḥmad b Mas'ūd then related how one day a company of women wished to have audience with Fāṭima, Muḥammad's daughter. Muḥammad gave permission but Fāṭima, weeping, said, "O Father how long is it since I have had even a little shawl for my head and that mantle that I had pieced together in so many places with date-leaves is in pledge with Simeon the Jew. How can I receive them?" But Muhammad said, "There is no help you must go." Fāṭima went ashamed to the interview and came back in sorrow to her father, who was comforting her when the rustle of Gabriel's wings was heard. Gabriel looked at Fāṭima and asked "What is this sorrow? Ask the women then what garments they had on and what thou." Muhammad sent a messenger to the women, who returned, and said "It was so at the time when the Mistress of Creation bestowed beauty on that assembly that the onlookers were astounded though clothed they seemed to themselves naked, and among themselves they were asking Whence came this fine linen and from which shop this embroidery? What skilful artificers, what nimble-fingered craftsmen!" Fatima said "O my father why didst thou not tell me that I might have been glad." He answered "O dear one, thy beauty consisted in that which was concealed inside thyself."

"By my life," continued Aḥmad "such modesty was allowable in Fāṭima brought up in seclusion but here we have a strong and able man of happy fortune one who is known as a pattern to others in both practice and theory. Though thou hast considered thyself naked, yet they have clothed thee in a robe from the wardrobe of Eternity. Is it proper for this robe to be concealed instead of being displayed for the enlightenment of others?" And advertising to the saying, "When a son of Adam dies, his work is cut short, except in three things," he takes the three one by one. First, a con tinuing alms, but ' Every kindness is an alms, and it is a kindness that thou meet thy brother with a cheerful countenance, and that thou empty thy bucket into the pots of thy brother ' that is, alms does not wholly consist in spreading food before a glutton, or giving some worthless thing to a pauper, it is a truer alms and a more imperishable hospitality to wear a cheerful countenance before one's friends, "and if others have the outward semblance of alms, thou hast its inward essence, and if they have set forth a table of food before men, thou hast set forth a table of life before their souls, so much for what thou sayest, ' I am excluded from a continuing alms ' " "

Ahmad b Mas'ūd then takes up the second point, knowledge that benefits, and quotes, ' We take refuge with God from knowledge which does not benefit ' and " Many a wise man is destroyed by his ignorance and his knowledge which does not advantage him " As examples of knowledge that does not benefit he takes the science of metaphysics, a science tied by the leg to desire and notoriety, lying under the opprobrium of He who learns the science of metaphysics is a heretic, and flies in circles in the air " as well as of the saying ' A science newly born, weak in its credentials '—" I have perfected it for the sake of heresy, and so peace Then similarly the science of calculation, a veil which diverts attention from the Truth, a curtain in front of the subtleties of religion and the science of the stars, a science of conjectures and the seed of irreligion for " Whoso credits a soothsayer has become an infidel " After a tirade against the ordinary type of learned man he proceeds All their falsifyings and terrorizings and imaginings and conjecturings are limited by their own defects, that philosophy of the law is cherished which is notorious over all the quarters and regions of the world, there is your ' knowledge that men benefit by ' From earth to Pleiades who is there sees any benefit in our doctors? " He then tells Sanā'i that he is master of a more excellent wisdom, " the poets are the chiefs of speech," " the gift of the poets comes from the piety of the parents," " verily from poetry comes wisdom," and will have none of such sayings as " poetry is of the affairs of Satan " "

As to the third part of the tradition, and pious descendants to invoke blessings on him after his death, Ahmad says, " The sons which suffice are thy sons, what son born in the way of generation and begetting is dearer than thy sons, or more honoured ? Who has ever seen children like thine, all safe from the vicissitudes of time ? The sons of poets are the poets' words, as a former master has said—

‘ A learned man never desires son or wife

Should the offspring of both these fail the scholar's offspring would not be cut off ’

A son according to the flesh may be a defilement to a family, but the son of intelligence and wisdom is an ornament to the household. These sons of yours you cannot disown ’

He then asks Sanā'i why he has thus become a recluse, and indolent and languid. This languidness is indeed preferable to a total heedlessness and forgetfulness of God, though Mutanabbi has said—

“ I have not seen anything of the faults of men like the failure of those who are able to reach the end ”

He asks Sanā'i not to bring forward the saying, “ Laziness is sweeter than honey, ” but to bestir himself and collect and complete his poetical works.

Sanā'i tells us that he submitted himself to the advice of his friend, but brought forward the difficulties of house and food, since the work could not be performed friendless and homeless. Ahmad b Mas'ūd thereupon built him a house, gave him an allowance for his maintenance for one year, and sent also a supply of clothing. He was therefore enabled to complete and arrange his writings free from all care and anxiety. The preface ends with the praise of his generous friend.

IN THE NAME OF GOD, THE MERCIFUL, THE COMPASSIONATE 1

O Thou who nurtarest the mind, who adornest the body, O Thou who givest wisdom, who showest mercy on the foolish, Creator and Sustainer of earth and time, Guardian and Defender of dweller and dwelling, dwelling and dweller, all is of Thy creation, time and earth, all is under Thy command, fire and wind, water and the firm ground, 5 all are under the control of Thy omnipotence, O Thou the Ineffable From thy throne to earth, all is but a particle of what Thou hast created, ¹ the living intelligence is Thy swift messenger ² Every tongue that moves within the mouth possesses life for the purpose of praising Thee, Thy great and sacred names are a proof of Thy bounty and beneficence and mercy Each one of them is greater than heaven and earth and angel, they are a thousand and one, and they are ninety nine, each one of them is related to one of man's needs, but 10 those who are not in Thy secrets are excluded from them O Lord, of thy grace and pity admit this heart and soul to a sight of Thy name'

¹ L refers to the saying of the Imām Ja'far (great-grandson of Ḥusain the son of 'Alī, considered by the Shī'as one of the twelve rightful imāms)

'This dome (referring to the heavens) is the dome of mankind but God has many domes' The meaning then is, 'Let no one think that God's whole creation is comprehended in this one and though the living intelligence is one of His swift messengers between His court and this earth yet He has many others'

² عقل باروح 'the intelligence with the soul' perhaps referring to the Intelligence and the Soul which belong, in Muslim philosophy, to each of the nine Spheres or Heavens of Gibb p 44

Infidelity and faith, both travelling on Thy road, exclaim, He is alone, He has no partner ¹ The Creator, the Bounteous, the Powerful is He, the One, the Omnipotent,—not like unto us is He, the Living, the Eternal, the All knowing, the Potent, the Feeder of creation, the 15 Conqueror and the Pardoner He causes movement, and causes rest, He it is who is alone, and has no partner, to whatever thing thou ascribest fundamental existence, that thou assertest to be His partner, beware ^{1 2}

Our weakness is a demonstration of His perfection, His omnipotence is the deputy of His names Both No and He ³ returned 2 from that mansion of felicity with pocket and purse empty What is there above imagination, and reason, and perception, and thought except the mind of him who knows God ² for to a knower of God wherever he is, in whatever state, the throne of God is as a carpet under his shoe The seeing soul knows praise is folly, if given to other than the Creator, He who from earth can create the body 5 and make the wind ⁴ the register of speech, the Giver of reason the Inspirer of hearts, who calls forth the soul, the Creator of causes,—generation and corruption, ⁵ all is his work He is the source of all creation, and the place to which it returns, all comes from Him and all returns to Him, good and evil all proceeds to Him He creates the freewill of the good and of the wicked, He is the Author of the soul, the Originator of wisdom, He from nothing created thee something, thou wert of no account, and He exalted thee

¹ B quotes a verse of a certain Sūfi I am astonished for why is this enmity between faith and infidelity ' The Ka ba and the idol temple are both lighted by the same lamp

² True existence is God other existences exist only in an imagined existence And whatever picture or conception of God's existence thou formest if thou assert that He exists in that way thou assertest that He has a partner For God is different from that nor can anyone understand or imagine at all the mode of existence of His essence ' L

⁵ کون و فساد the process of transmutation of the simple elements which is ever going on Cf Gibb p 47

No mind can reach a comprehension of His mode of being, the 10 reason and soul know not His perfection. The mind of Intelligence is dazzled by His majesty, the soul's eye is blinded before His perfection. The Primal Intelligence¹ is a product of His nature,—it He admitted to a knowledge of himself. Imagination lags before the glory of His essence, understanding moves confined before His nature's mode of being. His fire, which in haughtiness He made His carpet, burnt the wing of reason, the soul² is a serving man in 15
 His pageant, reason a novitiate in His school. What is reason in this guest-house?³ only a crooked writer of the script of God.

What of this intelligence, agitator of trifles? What of this changing inconstant nature? When He shows to intelligence the road to Himself, then only can intelligence fitly praise Him. Since Intelligence was the first of created things,⁴ Intelligence is above all choicest things besides, yet Intelligence is but one word out of His 20 record, the soul⁵ one of the foot-soldiers at His door. Love He perfected through a reciprocal love, but intelligence He tethered even by intelligence.⁶ Intelligence like us, is bewildered on the road to His nature, like us confounded. He is intelligence of intelligence, 3 and soul of soul, and what is above that, that He is. How through the promptings of reason and soul and senses can one come to know God? But that God showed him the way, how could man ever have become acquainted with Divinity?

¹ عقل اول the Universal Intelligence or pure thought, the first emanation of the First Cause. Cf. Gibb p. 42.

² نفس probably نفس اول or نفس كل the Primal or Universal Soul, which flows from the Universal Intelligence.

³ i.e. the world.

⁴ According to the tradition: The first thing God created was Intelligence, L. That is, in the Muslim philosophy, the Universal Intelligence.

⁵ As above, the Universal Soul.

⁶ 'The love of the lover is not perfected till he receives the love of the beloved; then love attains perfection. But reason halts in the valley of sight and proof, and that same proof becomes a shackle for its feet. Hence the difference between love and reason: love is perfected by love itself, but reason is only bound by reason, and prevented from putting its foot beyond the things of reason, and has no power to perfect itself. But God knows if this is right.'

ON THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD

- 5 Of himself no one can know Him, His nature can only be known through Himself Reason sought His truth,—it ran not well, impotence hastened on His road, and knew Him ¹ His mercy said, Know me, otherwise who, by reason and sense, could know Him? How is it possible by the guidance of the senses? How can a nut rest firmly on the summit of a dome? Reason will guide thee, but 10 only to the door His grace must carry thee to Himself ² Thou canst not journey there by reason's guidance, perverse like others, commit not thou this folly His grace leads us on the road, His works are guide and witness to Him O thou, who art incompetent to know thine own nature, how wilt thou ever know God? Since thou art incapable of knowing thyself, how wilt thou become a knower of the Omnipotent? ³ Since thou art unacquainted with the first steps towards a knowledge of Him, how thinkest thou to conceive of Him as He is? ⁴
- 15 In describing Him in argument, speech is a comparison,⁵ and silence a dereliction of duty ⁶ Reason's highest attainment on His road is amazement, 'the people's riches is their zeal for Him' ⁷

¹ Impotence acknowledging its inability became the receptacle of divine mercy and so succeeded in knowing Him according to the saying To be confounded in knowledge is knowledge ' B

² Had this line stood alone I should have liked in view of the next line and the general tenour of the whole to emend وہرولک (for وہرولک), "reason travels but lamely to His door See however 1 20 inf where also reason is styled رہا

³ L refers to the tradition من عرف نفسه فقد عرف ربه, 'he who knows himself knows his Lord'

⁴ Reading, with HI مر, others مرا, which makes the line tautological or (adopting L's suggestion that ساحش is equivalent to سبح) brings in God's works, which are not here under discussion

⁵ So. of Him with something else, which is infidelity

⁶ Hence the true believer is in a dilemma

⁷ Referring to the words spoken according to tradition, by Muḥammad, O Lord, increase my amazement at Thee " L

⁸ "Till zeal becomes the stock in trade and capital of man's nature and character, he cannot claim to be a worshipper of the One," L, who also

Imagination falls short of His attributes, understanding vainly boasts her powers, the prophets are confounded at these sayings, the saints stupefied at these attributes. He is the desired and lord of reason and soul, the goal of disciple and devotee¹. Reason is 20 as a guide to His existence,² all other existences are under the foot of His existence. His acts are not bounded by 'inside' and 'outside', His essence is superior to 'how' and 'why'. Intelligence has not reached the comprehension of His essence, the soul and heart of reason are dust upon this road, reason, without 4 the collyrium of friendship with Him, has no knowledge of His divinity. Why dost thou instigate imagination to discuss Him? How shall a raw youth speak of the Eternal?

By reason and thought and sense no living thing can come to know God.³ When the glory of His nature manifests itself to reason, it sweeps away both reason and soul. Let reason be invested with 5 dignity in the rank where stands the faithful Gabriel, yet before all His majesty a Gabriel becomes less than a sparrow through awe,⁴ says that عبد may be referred to the Creator and quotes Sa'd is jealous in honour but I am more jealous in honour than Sa'd and God than I عبد 'jealous in honour' being one of the names of God so but that God's jealousy for His own honour came to help the believer by removing false conceptions who would keep his place or continue on the straight road or be preserved from idolatry and infidelity?

³ Both reading and translation are unsatisfactory but perhaps less so than the alternative (v. crit. app.) by reason and thought and sense no one but God can know God, which L explains 'till reason and thought and sense become the instrument of God and man the instrument of God's agency, he cannot by reason and thought and sense know God. Then, through God's agency he comes to know God's nature by the means of reason and the rest'

⁴ The meaning perhaps being that the author will not refuse a certain degree of authority and dignity to reason but granting reason even arch angel's rank still that is as nothing before God's majesty reason arriving there bows down her head, the soul¹ flying there folds her wing The raw youth discusses the Eternal only in the light of his shallow sense and wicked soul, shall thy nature, journeying towards the majesty and glory of His essence, attain to a knowledge of Him?

ON THE ASSERTION OF THE UNITY

He is One, and number has no place in Him,² He is Absolute, and dependence is far removed from Him, not that One which reason and understanding can know, not that Absolute which sense and imagination can recognise He is not multitude, nor paucity,³ one multiplied by one remains one⁴ In duality is only evil and error, in singleness is never any fault

While multitude and confusion remain in thy heart, say thou 'One' or 'Two'—what matter, for both are the same Thou the devil's pasture know for certain what and how much, and why and how! ³ "Multiplicity has not befallen God on account of the multitudinous emanations that have proceeded from Him by way of manifestation of His essence and names and attributes nor before the creation could fewness be affirmed He is that One which manifests itself as many by interfusion in created existence yet multiplicity does not arise in His essence for real existence is one only and created existences all exist only in the mind All things are vain but God! ¶ Absolute existence flows into and interfuses its own manifestations by emanation 'There is no existence but God no being but God, everything perishes except His face' " L

⁴ "The numerical one in which multiplicity and paucity are (potentially) contained, multiplied however often by itself, gives one, how then can that Unity which cannot be contained in the reason and understanding manifesting itself so variously be of the same nature?" B

The sūra Yā Sīn is held in great honour as being according to a tradition of Muḥammad the heart of the Qur'ān. The meaning of this line is not clear to the commentators who (reading يدور) translate in various ways: (a) made the eye a mouth full of Yā Sīn, 'eye and mouth resembling each other, one being guarded by a row of teeth, the other by a row of eyelashes, both of which moreover resemble the letter sīn (س) in being a row of projections; (b) or construing similarly the meaning may be that when the mouth full of teeth is viewed by the eye, the latter by reflection of the precious pearl of the teeth becomes full of Yā Sīn, (c) or 'the mouth filled with Yā Sīn was made through its precious pearls by the creative word kun (a delight) to the beholding eye; (d) or by the eye man may be meant who

ON THE BLIND MEN AND THE AFFAIR OF THE ELEPHANT ¹ 10

There was a great city in the country of Ghūr, in which all the people were blind. A certain king passed by that place, bringing his army and pitching his camp on the plain. He had a large and magnificent elephant to minister to his pomp and excite awe, and to attack in battle. A desire arose among the people to see this monstrous elephant, and a number of the blind, like fools, visited it, 15 every one running in his haste to find out its shape and form. They came, and being without the sight of their eyes groped about it with their hands, each of them by touching one member obtained a notion of some one part, each one got a conception of an impossible object, and fully believed his fancy true. When they returned to the people 20 of the city, the others gathered round them, all expectant, so misguided and deluded were they. They asked about the appearance and shape of the elephant, and what they told all listened to. One 9 asked him whose hand had come upon its ear about the elephant, he said, It is a huge and formidable object, broad and rough and spreading, like a carpet. And he whose hand had come upon its trunk said, I have found out about it, it is straight and hollow in the middle like a pipe, a terrible thing and an instrument of destruction. And he who had felt the thick hard legs of the elephant said, As I have 5 it in mind, its form is straight like a planed pillar. Every one had seen some one of its parts, and all had seen it wrongly. No mind knew the whole,—knowledge is never the companion of the blind, all, like fools deceived, fancied absurdities.

Men know not the Divine essence, into this subject the philosophers may not enter.

'His face' says one, 'His feet' another, and no one says to him, 'Where is thy object?' From all this talk there comes altercation, and there results what happened in the case of the blind men and the elephant.

originally a pious annotation in the margin. In A it runs: On the Istiwā verily it is in accordance with reason and its manner unknown and belief in it is commanded by authority. The chapter is an attack upon the anthropomorphists whose arguments were drawn from the many allusions in the Qur'ān to God's bodily members: His face, hands, feet, etc. and also especially from the word istawā (inf. istawū) translated as 'He sat', 'settled himself' on the throne, or 'He ascended the throne' (v. ant. p. 519 sqq.). These passages were a perpetual source of dispute in Islām: see on the early disputes of the orthodox with the Mu'tazilites on this subject Macdonald's 'Development of Muslim Theology and Jurisprudence' p. 145 and for the way in which the istiwā was explained cf. the creed composed by al-Ghazzālī given in the same book p. 301. 'He is seated firmly upon his throne' after the manner which He has said, and in the sense in which he willed a being seated firmly which is far removed from contact and fixity of location and being established and being enveloped and being removed. The throne does not carry Him, but the throne and those that carry it are carried by the grace of his power and mastered by his grasp. He is above the throne and the heavens and above everything unto the limit of the Pleiades with an above-ness which does not bring Him nearer to the throne and the heavens just as it does not make Him further from the earth and the Pleiades. For Malik b. Anas's dictum upon the istiwā v. op. cit. p. 186.

L. furnishes us with an example of the means used in the interpretation of these passages inasmuch as he translates istiwā as equivalent to istilā i.e. the possession of absolute power and says that the reason why the throne is mentioned (in the passages of the Qur'ān where, according to the usual translation we read that God sat upon the throne) as being that over which God has absolute power is that the throne is the greatest and mightiest thing of all creation. Sanā'i himself v. text is content simply to say that the passages are allegories.

i.e., the prophets are in deep affliction because even they have not attained to the heights of the knowledge of God. Cf. p. 3, l. 18.

in the commentators of the notes in Sale. The cat continues L was a prophet in the sense of acting as a warning to the six turning them towards the true God and strengthening their belief in Him and the dog of the text is the dog who was their companion in the cave.

Or says he the reference may be to the six guests of Shaykh Akhi Farj Zanjāni who had a cat which on the arrival of visitors used to mew once for each person and the servant used accordingly to put one cup for each mew. One day there was one person too many for the number of places set whereon the cat came in smelt at each one and made urine against one of them. On investigation this one was found to be an unbeliever. This same cat was present one day when a black snake fell into the cauldron where milk and rice were cooking the attendant took no notice of the cat's mewing and evident perturbation and finally the cat jumped into the cauldron and died. On emptying it the snake was discovered.

The dog he continues may be the one of the following story. Shaykh Najm al-Dīn Kibri of Naishāpūr was one day discussing with his disciples the story of the Cave and the dog of the sleepers. One of the circle Shaykh Sa'd al-Dīn Hamawī chanced to wonder in himself if in that company there were any one whose companionship could make an impression on a dog (as association with those seven pious men was supposed to have affected their dog). Knowing by his miraculous gifts what was passing in his mind Shaykh Najm al-Dīn rose and went to the door of the cell a dog came up to him and wagged its tail. The Shaykh looked at it whereon its nature became changed it became beside itself left the city went to the graveyard and there rubbed its head on the ground. Wherever it went subsequently fifty or sixty dogs accompanied it in silence and great respect. It lived a long time thus and finally died.

¹ The comparison is with the clouds prostrating themselves on the earth at rain. حود = abundant rain. خرد = liberality. While the latter is the appropriate rhyme to the preceding heimstich probably both senses were present in the author's mind.

³ The elders of his family and tribe B The meaning is that he never possessed any self of which the tribulations he experienced at the hands of his tribe could deprive him

⁴ i.e. how can He manifest Himself so as to be comprehensible ⁷

secret, the artifice of His majesty¹ A form of water and earth is dazzled by His love, the eye and heart are blinded by His Nature Reason in her uncleanness, wishing to see Him says, like Moses 'Show me', when the messenger² comes forth from that glory 5 she says in its ear 'I turn repentant unto thee'³ Discover then the nature of His Being through thy understanding⁴ recite his thousand and one pure names It is not fitting that His Nature should be covered by our knowledge whatever thou hast heard, that is not He 'Point' and 'line' and 'surface' in relation to His Nature are as if one should talk of His 'substance' and 'distance' and 'six surfaces' the Author of those three is beyond place, the Creator of these three is not contained in time⁵ No philosopher 10 knows of imperfection in Him while He knows the secrets of the invisible world He is acquainted with the recesses of the mind and the secrets of which as yet there has been formed no sketch upon thy heart

Kāf and nūn are only letters that we write but what is lun ' the hurrying of the agent of the divine decree If He delays, or acts quickly it depends not on His weakness whether He is angry or placable depends not on His hate His causation is known to neither infidelity nor faith and neither is acquainted

² پیک peyk B the invisible messenger Reason

³ In its ear = in the ear of that glory For the words which Reason says to that glory will necessarily be said in the ear and in secret L The reference is to Qm 7 138 sq And when Moses came to our appointment and his Lord spake unto him he said O my Lord show me that I may look on thee He saith Thou canst not see me but look upon the mountain and if it remain steady in its place thou shalt see me but when his Lord appeared unto the mountain He made it dust and Moses fell down in a swoon And when he came to himself he said Celebrated be thy praise I turn repentant unto thee and am the first of those who are repented

⁵ The texts all have درج , but درج seems obviously required

15 with His Nature He is pure of those attributes the foolish speak of, purer than the wise can tell

Reason is made up of confusion and conjecture both limping over the earth's face Conjecture and cogitation are no good guides wherever conjecture and cogitation are, He is not Conjecture and cogitation are of His creation ¹ man and reason are His newly ripening plants Since any affirmation about His Nature is beyond man's province it is like a statement about his mother by a blind 20 man, ² the blind man knows he has a mother, but what she is like he cannot imagine, his imagination is without any conception of what things are like of ugliness and beauty of inside and outside

In a world of double aspect such as this it would be wrong that 18 thou shouldst be He and He thou ³ If thou assert Him not, it is not well if thou assert Him it is thyself thou assertest not He If thou know not (that He is) thou art without religion and if thou assert Him thou art of those who liken Him Since He is beyond 'where and when how can He become a corner of thy thought? When the wayfarers travel towards Him they vainly 5 exclaim, Behold Behold' ⁴ Men of hawk like boldness are as

¹ And so must fall immeasurably short of Him

² According to B نردست is equivalent to برای فانی an affirmation about God's nature by a mortal But the introductory رایک is a difficulty which he does not explain Hence I have retained رایک for which some texts have هست through assimilation to نست and have divided the words as نری (نری = foreign external)

³ The full meaning of this and the following lines I explain thus — in this world of unreality with two faces and necessary duality it would be wrong with your borrowed existence and without discarding self to claim unity of existence with God and knowledge of Him If you assert not His necessary Existence and affirm not His Being in its oneness it is not well and you are an unbeliever whereas if you do this and assert His Existence whatever you assert is yourself and not He for He is above and free from anything you imagine and think And if you know not that there exists a God and take reason for guide you are without religion while if you assert it you are an anthropomorphist for He cannot be designated or described by any description and however you describe Him you fall into the error of likening Him'

If thou wilt, take hope, or if thou wilt, then fear the All wise has created nothing in vain He knows all that has been done or will be done, thou knowest not,—yet know that He will assuage thy pain 2 In the knowledge of Him is naught better than submission, that so thou mayest learn His wisdom and His clemency Of His wisdom He has given resources to His creatures, the greater to him who has the greater need to all He has given fitting resources, for 10 acquiring profit and warding off injury What has gone, what comes, and what exists in the world, in such wise it was necessary bring not folly into thy conversation look thou with acceptance on His decrees

ON THE EARNEST STRIVING

When thou hast passed from Self to being naught, gird up the loins of thy soul and set forth on the road when thou standest up 15 with loins girt thou hast placed a crown on thy soul's head Set then the crown of the advance on the head of thy soul, let the foot that would retreat be the companion of the mire 3 though the thoughtless man laughs at this act yet the wise chooses no other course

Whoso turns not his face towards God all his knowledge and possessions deem thou an idol Who turns away his face from God's presence, in truth I call not him a man a dog is better than a worth 20 less man who turns away his face for a dog finds not its prey without a search A dog that lives in ease, 4 though it gets fat is not therefore more useful than a greyhound

1 کو کو Coo coo the sound of the doves as well as meaning ' Where where ' 7

2 L refers to the reading کرد گند and suggests کرد as equivalent to کردار he says the rhyme is defective if it be not adopted but the rhyme is defective in any case (گند and کند)

4 کُهدی is a place where straw is put for dogs etc

19 He will not take hypocrisy and deceit and lying,¹ but looks to a man's belief in the Unity and his sincerity The eye that is fixed on wisdom chooses the Truth, the pleasure regarding eye sees not the Truth False is what delights the eye, the Truth enters not among earthy thoughts² Infidelity and faith both have their origin in thy hypocritical³ heart the path is long because thy foot delays were it not so the road to Him is but one step,—be a slave, and
 5 thou becomest a king with Him Know that the different names of the colours are illusory, that thy sustenance is to be sought in the river of the Absolute Leave off thy talk and come to the pavilion loose thy heavy bonds from off thyself Perhaps thou hast not tasted the true faith hast not seen the face of truth and sincerity so that thou thoughtest the mystery was plain to be seen and things thou sawest plainly have been mysteries to thee I see in thee no rightness of belief, if there were I would be the true dawn of reli-
 10 gion to thee —I would have made the path of the true faith plain to thee hadst thou not been a fool and a madman

[OF THE TRAVELER ON THE PATH]⁴

A man should be like Abraham, that through God his shadow may become a shady place⁵ in fear of him⁶ and by his teaching the universe dares to breathe Pharaoh is destroyed by the mighty aid of a Moses whom God assists

To the wayfarer towards God on the path of love His cheek is 15 the dawn of morning (who but He can tear away the veil by day

¹ مَكْرُوف the commentators seem to have mistaken the meaning here giving as the equivalent دُرَّة which means an instrument of hitting and striking a wooden sword (B Q)

² The Truth in these lines (حَق) may equally be rendered God or reality

³ It of two colours

⁴ This chapter can scarcely claim to be more than a series of short passages and single lines at variance with the context in which they stood and collected here as having somewhat in common with each other

⁵ Perhaps referring to Abraham's being unharmed in Nimrod's fire these first three lines speak of the powers given by God to those who seek Him

⁶ i.e. the seeker after God

or hang the veil by night ?)¹ His mind is snatched away from bonds of earth, the spiritual rule of the world is made manifest to him. He treads the Throne under his feet like a carpet. He is an owl, but bears with him a phoenix.² He becomes lord of this abode and that,³ the loyal slave of God, the pure Intelligence reveals its face to man, and beautifies his body with its own light. The bounty of God throws its shade over his heart, then he says How He prolongs the shadow.⁴ When his soul feels the touch of God 'We make the sun' reveals its face to him.⁵ The dumb all find tongues when they receive the perfume of life from his soul. 20

In His path the lovers recite to their souls the verse 'Every creature on the earth is subject to decay'.⁶ The heavens, and the natural world and its varied colours seem vile to his perception. Whoso is turned away from this wine, for him all its fragrance and colour is destroyed, so that when with new ear thou shalt hear the shouts 5 of 'He is One, He has no partner' thou shalt no longer in madness desire the varied colours even though thy Jesus be the dyer. Thou shalt take what thou wilt of the colours put them into one jar and bring them out again,—listen truly and not in folly. This saying is not for fools—all these deceitful colours the jar of the Unity makes one colour. Then being now of one colour all has become Him. 10 the rope becomes slender when reduced to a single strand.⁷

¹ The meaning may be that God is the light of the way and the last line is possibly a parenthesis the thought of which was prompted by the preceding.

² The owl is a bird of ill-omen the phoenix (هوما) is a bird of happy omen prognosticating a crown to every head it shades.

³ of both worlds

⁴ Qur 25 47 Hast thou not looked to thy Lord how he prolongs the shadow?

⁵ Qur 25 48 Then we make the sun a quide thereto then we contract it towards us with an easy contraction. This and the last quotation are part of a passage descriptive of God's benefits to man.

⁶ Qur 55 26

⁷ عيسى نور thy Jesus paraphrased by B as سنگ دل نور thy stony heart.

⁸ I suppose the meaning to refer to the simplification of phenomena—that they are more easily grasped when reduced to unity.

[ON BEING SILENT]

The path of religion is neither in works nor words, there are no buildings thereon but only desolation. Whoso becomes silent to pursue the path, his speech is life and sweetness. If he speaks, it will not be out of ignorance and if he is silent it will not be from sloth, when silent he is not devising frivolity when speaking he scatters abroad no trifling talk.

- 15 Those fools, the thieves and pickpockets keep their knowledge to use in highway robbery ¹. Thou seest, O Master thou of many words that thou hadst better have light in thy heart than words when thou becomest silent thou art most eloquent but if thou speakest thou art like a captain of war ². 'Kun' consists of two letters both voiceless. Hū consists of two letters, both silent ³. Doubt not concerning these words of mine open thine eyes pay heed for a little.
- 20 There exists the dog ⁴ and the stone the stove of the bath, and

* Kun is Be the word used at the creation Hū is Ho (od) Ha is wind sound voice tone so هو silent. The commentators give no real help on this line it seems to imply that the mightiest existences and actions do not require speech

⁴ The following fragments do not appear to have their place in any of the chapters near which they are found in the texts

⁵ Dog and stone are of His creation the stone being created for driving off the dog and so the stove of the bath and the slave are of His creation the slave to light the fire of the stove but thou who art of the most excellent of the marvels of God art like only to a ruby deposited with care in casket " B

THE PARABLE OF THOSE WHO HEED NOT ⁶

A fool saw a camel grazing, and said, Why is thy form all crooked ' Said the camel In disputing thus thou censurest the sculptor ,

¹ This passage occurs shortly after the chapter Of the Right Guidance and I think is very probably spurious It seems to be connected with the word حود in the last line of that chapter p 15 l 4 and possibly represents the pious reflections of some reader noted down by him in the margin of the original or of an early copy and thence taken up into the text by subsequent copyists

² The Incomparable Creator after adorning thee inwardly that is designing thy inward being as He had done thy outward parts held up before thee a mirror of light that is understanding and clear comprehension by means of which thou mightest come to know good and evil Then till pride and self conceit became natural to thee He kept thee from lust and anger and until He gave to thee the eye of vanity He kept thee from being acceptable in thine own eyes B but in adding And God knows the truth of the matter ' he does not appear to be very sure of his explanation In the absence of the proper context interpretation is perhaps impossible the lines occur in the texts in Again the Parable of the Companions of Indifference,' p 23

³ In the middle of the passage which I have called On being Silent p 20

A squint-eyed son asked his father O thou whose words are as a key to the things that are locked up why saidst thou that a 10 squinter sees double³ I see no more things than there are if a squint-eyed person counted things crookedly the two moons that are in the heavens would seem four

But he who spoke thus spoke in error for if a squinter looks at a dome it is doubled³

I fear that on the high road of the faith thou art like the crooked seeing squinter, or like the fool who senselessly quarrelled with the camel because of God's handiwork His flawless creation is the

² On the twisted snake AB have gloss نفس as B in a note explains نفس سهدماک a terrible spirit i.e., to guard it The hand and foot of Wisdom is simply Wisdom a sound guiding prudent understanding B The meaning of the last two lines would thus be that though misfortunes may happen to the body a serene wisdom will preserve the soul's peace in every condition

qibla of our understanding, His changeless nature is the ka'ba of our desire. He has exalted the soul in giving it wisdom, He has nourished His pardoning mercy on our faults. God well knows 15 your turning to Him, His wisdom it is which prevents His answering your prayers. Though the physician hears his patient when he begs, he does not give earth to an earth eater, and though his soul desire it, how shall He give earth through all his life to him who digs the earth? How shall His act be without a reason, or His decrees in accordance with thy weak understanding? ² 1

There are exceeding many who have drunk the cup of pure poison 20 and have not died of it, nay, it is life's food to him who from the violence of his disease is wasted to a reed. If there is a louse, thou hast a finger nail, punish the flea, when it jumps on thee, though the mountains were full of snakes, fear not,—there are stones and an antidote on the mountain too, and if thou art apprehensive of the scorpion thou hast slipper and shoe for it. If pain abounds in the world, everyone has a 5 thousand remedies.

¹ The texts have مودة mawdu. I have however adopted what was apparently the original reading of Abdu'l-Lajis's edition since the commentary runs مودة بمعنى كودة ومودة اعلى معدر حقيقة mawdu bi-ma'na kudu wa-mawdu 'ala ma'dir haqq.

² أقرب according to B is the globe of fire an element the highest of the four called sometimes the charkh al-athir so far agreeing with Gibb, p. 46 who discussing Muslim philosophy says — The first manifestation of specific form is in the Four Elements Fire Air Water and Earth. The arrangement of the elemental world is like that of the otherworld a series of concentric spherical layers. As Fire is the lightest and subtlest of the four its region is the highest lying within and touching the concave surface of the Sphere of the Moon. In its pure state Fire is colourless and transparent consequently the Sphere of Fire is invisible.

B proceeds Zamharir = intense cold' and the globe of intense cold is the limiting stratum of the air. The sphere of air is the next inside that of fire it is subdivided into three strata (tabaqat). The Sphere of Fire and the highest stratum of the Sphere of Air though by their own nature stationary are carried round by the Sphere of the Moon in its revolution." Gibb op cit

10 There is a spiritual kingdom in the universe, and also a temporal power, above the throne light, and below darkness, both these principles He bestowed at the creation, when He spread His shadow over His handiwork The temporal world He has given of His bounty to the body the spiritual world as a glory to the soul that so both inner and outer man may receive food, the body from the lord of this world the soul from the Lord of the spirit world for through all His creation God keeps a benign grace for the benefit of the noble soul

In the technical language of the Sūfīs says I, poverty فقر, means annihilation in God the union of a drop with the ocean the last stage of the perfected ones Poverty is blackness of the face in both worlds' means that the traveller pursuer is black of face before the flame of his heart's desire,¹ though 20 in tribulation the ugly Ethiopian finds gladness in his blackness of face, his gladness comes not from his beauty, his happiness comes from his sweet odour² Brighter than the splendour of the new moon becomes entirely annihilated in God so that—externally internally in this world in the next—he has no existence and returns to his essential and original non existence This is true poverty hence it is said When poverty is absolute that is God And till the traveller experiences perfect non-existence or absolute annihilation he cannot experience absolute existence which is eternal life with God And death from self is the essence of life to God and absolute life is seen to consist in absolute death To this degree nothing can attain but the perfect man who is thus the most perfect of all created things the object of the creation

The wolf and Yūsuf appear to thee to be small and great,¹ but with Him, Yūsuf and wolf are the same. What, to His Mercy,² matters opposition or help? What, to His Wrath, are Moses and Pharaoh?³

Thy service or thy rebellion are an honour or a shame to thee, but with Him the colour of both is the same. What honour has He from Reason, or from the lightning, what greatness from the soul, or the sky? The soul and the heavens are His creatures. Happy the man who is chosen of Him.

The heavens and He who causes them to revolve are as the mill 5
stone and the miller, the supreme Disposer and the obedient Reason are as the carver's self and the matter he shapes. The motion of the restless heavens and of the earth is as it were an ant in the mouth of a dragon: the dragon does not swallow the ant and the revolution of the unconscious heavens sweeps on. ³ I t within the fatal membranes of Not the dragon is the same as annihilation c/ Jāmi بہنگ لا نراد سر. The dragon does not swallow the ant because of its excessive insignificance and the revolution of the heavens goes on while they are unconscious of their position. As the ant passes into the dragon's mouth and knows not of its passage into non-existence and destruction so the revolution of the heavens and the earth they contain passes along: they themselves not knowing that they are in the mouth of the dragon of annihilation. And on the heavens the millstone of calamity [so called since their revolutions are the cause of terrestrial events] God has imposed their labours while they enclosed in the membranes of Lā know not what is being effected by themselves. So L who adds as an alternative that the subject in the last line of the text may be چرخ understood. B gives a different explanation again.

⁴ Or, carrying on the metaphor of the ant in the dragon's mouth perhaps. Think of thy life as a grain of corn in His mouth.

⁵ i.e., life as inevitably attended by death.

Thou knowest that thy goblet¹ has four feet² for movement, yet though thou be persevering in His service thou wilt not reach His path but by His grace When will the slave who wishes to attain to God reach Him by means of reason or by hand and foot³ When will he attain to God who in his own body attains (only to the recognition of) his hands and feet⁴

ON THE JUSTICE OF THE PRINCE AND THE SECURITY OF HIS SUBJECTS

Umar one day saw a group of boys on a certain road all engaged in play and everyone boasting of himself, everyone was in haste to

ON CELEBRATING THE PRAISE OF GOD ²

To call on the name of friends, and the unhappy ones ³ of this 10 world, how thinkest thou of it ? It is like calling on old women Oppression, if He ordain it, is all justice, a life without thought of Him is all wind. He laughs who is brought to tears through Him but that heart is an anvil that thinks not on Him. Thou art secure when thou pronounce His name,—thou keepest a firm footing on thy path, make thou thy tongue moist like earth with remembrance of Him that He may fill thy mouth, like the rose, with gold ⁴. He 15 fills with life the soul of the wise man the heart of the lover of self. He leaves thirsty ⁵. That thy purpose and judgment may be true, leave not His door at all to pay heed to those about us ⁶ is the act of a thoughtless fool.

CONCERNING THE PIOUS DISCIPLE AND THE GREAT MASTER

³ كَم مَسْحِي = unable to speak from emotion or grief unhappy unfortunate that is they can do nothing to help you

⁴ Referring to the yellow stamens of the wild rose

⁵ B takes in an opposite sense — The learned worshippers of outward form and the brainless philosophers (the mercy of God be not on them) He has filled with thoughts of self but the heart of the lover who seeks Him he makes thirsty (i.e., for Himself). If the second hemistich stood by itself, the rendering would be allowable but there is an obvious antithesis and it seems to be training the sense to take حَان as thoughts of self and حَان in a bad sense

⁶ B explains rather as ‘those of lofty station’

giving him a draught out of the law answered him and said, " Unjust is that ill fated one who for one moment of the day and night in 31 negligence forgets Him he is not His submissive slave " If thou forget Him for one breath there is none so shamelessly unjust as thou but if thou be present¹ and commemorate His name, thy being is lost in the fulfilment of His commands² So think upon Him that in thy heart and soul thou lapse not into forgetfulness
 5 even for an instant Keep in mind this saying of that ever watchful traveller on this road the impetuous lion 'And worship thou the Lord in prayer as if thou sawest Him'³ and if thou do not thus, thou wilt be forced to cry Help help' So worship Him in both worlds as if thou sawest Him with thine outward eye though thine eye sees Him not, thy Creator sees thee

 benefits and patience in affliction B

Human reason cannot comprehend the perfection of the essential beneficence of the Bountiful and because the door of the senses is closed against the eye of knowledge and uprightness it cannot thus acquire the comprehension of His beneficence but to that eye the path of the spirit is opened i.e. the inward mode of existence is placed within the reach of the reasonable soul which mode of existence is obtained only by him who is single of eye and of heart who exists every moment in contemplation of the world of thanksgiving and to exist thus is the perfection of the spirit of the knowers and the saints and the prophets B

⁴ i.e. made firm thy foot in the path of acquiescence and resignation B

⁵ i.e. carnal desires the wiles of the devil and the things of the world of sense B

⁶ نكا an oblique wind harsh and rough which rises from the north-east
 B who also names the other oblique winds S W S E N W Stein (Dict.)
 however gives نكا as a general name for a wind blowing obliquely and names the N E النكاهة B reading مرد كنى the townsman adds When a man comes out of the street and market into the open plain he escapes the torment of the whirlwind and the naktū though to our ideas it would seem that he was more fully exposed to both

⁷ i.e. His absence or invisibility knows our faults

He has heard The sons of men ever unjust and ignorant,¹ talk in folly of God's kindness He works good, and ye work evil He 10 knows the hidden things and ye are full of fault Behold after thy so many doubts this care of the Knower of the hidden for a wicked world, had it not been pure favour on His part how could a handful of earth have come to wear a crown ?

The alighting place of His pardon is on the plain of sin the army of His kindness comes out to meet our sighs when the sigh of the knower of God raises the veil,² hell seizes its shield from fear of Him His forgiveness grants itself to our sins His mercy des 15 cends to bestow benefits³ Thou hast committed the iniquity, yet He keeps faith with thee He is more true to thee than thou art to thyself His bounty brought thee into activity otherwise how could this market have been set up on earth ?⁴ Whoso becomes non-existent to him is given existence whoso ships receives a helping hand He it is who takes the hand of the friendless and chooses weeds like us⁵ Forasmuch as He is pure, He desires the pure the 20 Knower of the hidden desires the dust⁶

ON HIS OMNISCIENCE, AND HIS KNOWLEDGE OF THE MINDS OF MEN⁷

He knows the draught of each of His creatures He has given it and He can give its opposite He is the Creator of thy wisdom 38

¹ B compares Qur 33 72 Verily he (man) is ever unjust and ignorant

² i.e. perhaps causes God to come forth and manifest Himself in power

³ Or perhaps more literally His forgiveness possesses the faculty of favourable reception on account of our sins His mercy possesses the faculty of descending in order that it may bestow benefits

⁴ The market is the human body Brought thee into activity i.e. caused thee to exist

⁵ B reading as most do a negative — those who are vile like us He chooses not — says He does not choose dogs like us who derive their power as individuals from the sensual savours of this house of deception but He chooses him whose individuality has no other friend but God's essence and who in his friendless state desires no one else The tenor of the passage however is in the opposite sense and the positive is supported by H and M

⁶ Since a substance becomes not pure till it has been burnt and turned to ashes He the pure who will only have the pure seeks only the dust B

but His wisdom is untainted by the passage of thought ¹ He knows concerning thee what is in thy heart, for He is the Creator both of thy heart and of thy clay Dost thou think that He knows as thou knowest ² then is the ass of thy nature stuck fast in thy clay ³ He sees what is best for His creatures before the desire is formed, He knows the mind before the secret thought exists He knows what is in thy heart before thou speakest He performs the work God brings joy and takes away sorrow God knows our secrets, and He keeps them safe

Silence before Him is the gift of tongues ⁴ thy life is food thou receivest from a table bare of bread, man's desire cannot wish for such things as He has prepared for him ⁵ He knows the condition of His creatures He sees it and can give accordingly He has prepared for thee thy place in Paradise, that to-morrow thou mayest enter into joy ⁶ It is enough that He speaks — be thou dumb and speak not it is enough that He seeks, remain thou a cripple, and run not to and fro ⁷ In presence of the power and omniscience of God feebleness and ignorance are best feebleness makes thee wise, weakness confers eminence on thee

¹ His wisdom does not like ours depend on what occurs in the mind for mind has its place in the system of the elements and of matter not in the essence of the Ineffable and Inscrutable for cogitation has no place with Him B

² If thou hast this idea thou wilt never get onto the road B

³ The implication being apparently that there is no need of prayer for material blessings

⁴ L refers to the tradition of Muhammad Ey, hath not seen nor ear heard nor hath it entered the heart of man

⁵ An alternative reading might be rendered See to it that thou hast joined tomorrow with to-day i.e. prepare to-day for the judgment day (to-morrow)

⁶ Since He who speaks to thee is all knowing thou needest not to speak to Him of thy desire And since He in mercy seeks to forgive and spare thee and the services He has commanded He has commanded only that thou mayest justify His mercy to thee and since it is certain that thou canst arrive nowhere without His generosity do not let thy search for the things of the external world enter in between thee and thy union with thy desire but rely thou on His desire and love for thee When thou abandonest the search for externalities and enterest the stage of resignation and givest thyself up to Him He will be sufficient as a searcher L

Whoso can make existence non-existent (can also change non-existence into existence) He in His mercy arrests the rhythmical forces in the wombs for the due constituting and establishing of the offspring ¹ and forasmuch as His inscrutability portrayed thy form ¹⁵ knowest thou not that thou canst not remain hidden ^{2 2} He knows thy case better than thyself why frequentest thou the neighbourhood of folly and deceit ² Speak not of thy heart's sorrow for He is speaking seek thou not for Him, for He is seeking ³

He perceives the touch of an ant's foot, though in night and darkness the ant move on a rock ⁴ if a stone moves in the dark night in the depth of the water, His knowledge sees it if there be a worm ²⁰ in the heart of a rock whose body is smaller than an atom, God by His knowledge knows its cry of praise and its hidden secret To thee He has given guidance in the path to the worm He has given its sustenance in the rock No soul has ever rested in patience apart ³⁹ from Him no understanding deceived Him by its subtlety He is ever aware of the minds of men — ponder thou this and thy duty is fulfilled

¹ منقاسی is a dun a person who exacts a debt importunate Here the idea is that of recurrence a recurrent force I wanders into medical details but errs I think in taking قائم کردن as establish for the establishment of a regularly recurring force would not tend to the formation and constituting of the developing organism on the contrary the suspension of active movements in the womb is what is required — a period of rest for the undisturbed development of the offspring The arrest, during pregnancy of the expulsive action of the womb as regards menstruation was probably present in Sanā's mind

² L prefers a different interpretation inasmuch as His inscrutability has portrayed thy form knowest thou not that thou canst not contain Inscrutability in the compass of thy comprehension [?] For the picture can by no means know the nature of the artist nor can what it comprehends contain the artist In view of the next line however the translation given seems the better

⁴ So small a thing as an ant on an unimpressible mass like a rock B
 'A denial of the doctrine of the philosophers who say that God knows the parts by the way of the whole not particularly the truth however is that He knows the parts as parts — nor does the weight of an atom escape thy Lord in earth or in heaven nor is there less than that nor greater but it is in the perspicuous Book (Qur 10 63) L

If thou turn thy face from evil usage ¹ thy mind shall preserve the true religion of Islam but since thou choosest to hold false ideas of His clemency thou shalt have no light but hell fire in thy heart 5 for since thou wilt not take account of His knowledge O man cherish no hope of clemency from Him His omniscience kindles the lamp of the understanding but His clemency teaches nature to sin were not His clemency a perpetual refuge how could a servant due to sin ²

If then thou committest a sin that sin falls under one of two cases if thou thinkest that God knows not I say to thee Well done ³ 10 O thorough going infidel ⁴ and if thou thinkest that God knows and still thou committest it Bravo impudent one and vile ⁵ Myself I acknowledge that no man knows thy secrets God knows God is not less than man and I take it that if He hides this forgiveness from thee is it not that His omniscience knows that it is thus with thee ⁶ Then turn from this vile conduct of thine otherwise on the day of thy resurrection thou wilt forthwith see thyself drowning in the sea of thy shame

15 CONCERNING HIS BENEFICENCE -AND VERILY HE IS THE PROVIDER OF PROVISIONS

When He lays the table of its food before the creature He provides a fare more ample than the eater's needs life and days and daily food come to all from Him happiness and fortune are from Him He supplies the daily bread of each nor seals the door of the

² To take account of His knowledge is to hold Him in truth the knower of all secrets and if one does so one may hope for His mercy For to hold Him omniscient is to fear Him and to fear Him makes thee the recipient of His mercy B

³ Apparently— His omniscience if reflected on will kindle so B when thou fully understandest His omniscience the lamp of the understanding becomes bright but if thou hast no knowledge of His omniscience and rehest on His clemency and hast abandoned thy fear of God thou becomest persistent in sin (ابرام بگدا رفت) and hast lost thy place

⁴ This confidence in His clemency springs from the servants not understanding His omniscience and not fearing Him ⁵ B

⁶ Ironically gloss in B است i e , this is a thorough going storehouse infidel and true believer wretched and prosperous,— to all their daily food and life renewed While the ḥā of necessity ¹ 20 is still in their throat the īm of His munificence ² has given His creatures their sustenance Except by bread we cannot live and appetite is our only relish, He shuns not His servants when they turn to Him,—He has given the relish He will give the bread too

Thy bread and life are in the treasury of God thou dost not 40 hold, according to His word that it is He ³ If thy daily bread be in China, thy horse of acquisition is ready saddled to bear thee speedily to it or to bring it to thee whilst thou art sleeping ⁴ Has He not said to thee, I am thy Sustainer the Knower of what is hidden and the Knower of what is manifest I gave life I give the means of 5 livelihood whatsoever thou askest I give forthwith ⁵ Know that, like the day, the matter of thy daily bread is well assured for thy daily bread is a present which the day brings with it, forasmuch as the kindness of God is on thee, thou holdest thy life as a pledge for thy food Take thought for thy life, and thou hast done the same for thy bread loaf succeeds loaf as far as the edge of the grave Hold firmly to this pledge, and eat thy bread, ⁶ and when the pledge passes from thee still shalt thou eat the food of Life ⁶ Life without 10 bread God gave to none, for life endures through bread, and when life quits the body, know for a certainty that now indeed sustenance has reached thee ⁷

 15 Thy daily bread is a charge on the All knowing and All powerful,—be not angry against prince or minister it comes from God's door and not by teeth or throat or pipe ³

The lordship of a house is a lordship with sorrow, especially for him who has no wealth or treasure the lordship of a house is all sorrow and desire —leave aside the house and God is sufficient for thee ⁴
 Let thy trust at all times be on God rather than on mill and

An old man put forth his head and seeing his field dried up 41 spoke thus — O Lord of both new and old ⁶ our food is in Thy hands do what thou wilt The sustenance Thou givest to fair and foul depends not on tears of cloud nor smiles of field I well know Thou art the Uncaused Sustainer ⁷ my life and my food, all comes from Thee Thy one is better than thousands of thousands for Thy little is not a little

¹ So to others and does not save it up the lion being a type of nobility

Lu to women the old fold on fold The men of the Path who are the men of wisdom (the knowers) every day make new progress in acquisitions and struggles and austerity which are their daily food while it is for women to gather up and watch over fragments So B (illustrating his tendency to read mystical meanings where they are not intended)

² Not from our teeth that (showing them) we should importune others or throat that we should cry out at men's doors nor in anyone's face that we should fall to lamentation (نه باي و نه در آيد) B It would seem however that teeth is used rather in reference to the teeth of wild animals by which they seize their food throat as B to calling aloud on others and pipe is perhaps the pipe of the dervishes and so means beggary

⁴ Kadkhudā : the lordship of a house splits up according to its derivation into kad house and Khudāy a lord God

⁵ i.e. in case thou dependest on mills and sacks

⁷ Rain, etc. is not the ultimate cause of our sustenance the ultimate cause is I thou who art uncaused

A flame from Him, and a hundred thousand stars appear, a 5 drop from Him, and a hundred thousand palm trees spring up¹ He who is in fear about his daily food is not a man,—truly he is less than a woman

Hast thou not heard how in a rainless time some birds received their food from a Magian's door² Many Muslims spoke to him, and among them one clever and eloquent—"Though the little birds 10 take your corn, yet this generosity of yours will not find acceptance" Said the Magian, "If He does not choose me, still He sees my toil since He himself is kind and generous, He does not think the same of niggardliness as of liberality"

Ja'far³ sacrificed his arm in His Path instead of arms God gave him wings None shall discover thy work but God, truly nothing can happen to thee from men Pay no heed to the doing and bustling 15 of men fasten thy mind on Him, and thou hast escaped from sorrow and bondage So far as thou canst, take thou no friend but Him, take men not into thy account at all Your bread is laid up in God's eternity, His friendship He gives you,—it is your life, know that both of these are represented in the world of love and search by the Persian water and the Arabic *father*⁴

¹ احضر /at/ green B supposes it to refer to rivers

² Ja far was Muhammad's cousin the son of Abu Jālib and brother of Ali On the death of Zaid during the battle of Mūta A H 8 he took command of the force and hamstringing his horse fought till he too fell. Muhammad is reported to have said I saw Ja far as an angel with two wings covered with blood his limbs stained therewith Hence Ja far is known as the winged martyr Cf Muir Life of Mahomet 3rd ed., p 383

³ The line is obscure to me nor can I derive much illumination from the commentators Water in Pers. is āb and 'father' in Ar is ab words which differ only in the quantity of the ā B says Although they differ in meaning yet in nature and pronunciation (! they are the same and) by any means of arrangement to take away ā from the words referred to is impossible so there is also a relation between the ā of āl (favours 1 17) and your life (gān) which is indissoluble and indestructible while life lasts God gives His favours' Similarly L whom B has imitated and expanded both mention the possibility of āb referring to the semen (c/ Qur 86 5 sqq)

[ON THE DESIRE FOR GOD ¹]

So long as thou art a stranger to the light of Moses,² thou art blind 20 to the day, like the bird of Jesus,³ since thou hast no knowledge of the path of poverty, thou art in hiding, like the inside of an onion⁴ First, for the sake of His comforting love, do thou make thy head thy foot, 42 like the reed,⁵ and continue seeking Him, that by thy perfect search thou mayest reach that place, where thou knowest thou needest seek no more

Did not an indolent one, when he heard murmurs of sloth on his heart's tongue, ask 'Ali, ' Say, O Prince, illuminer of the soul is the dark night better, or the day?''⁶ Murtaza⁷ said, "Hear, O ques-5 tioner, yield not to this backsliding, for to the lovers in this soul inflaming path the fire of the secret is better than the splendour of the day''⁸ He whose soul the path has fired stays not behind on foot at the halting place⁹ in that world where love tells the secret, thou no longer art, thy reason no longer endures

ON AFFECTION AND ISOLATION ¹⁰

The lovers are drunk in His Presence their reason in their sleeve

¹ There is no indication of the beginning of a fresh chapter here in any of the MSS The subject of the following verses however is different and we seem here to begin a fresh section of the book

² The desire to see God which burned in Moses B

³ The bat c/ Qur 3: 43 One of Jesus's miracles was the creation of a living bird out of clay which the learned suppose to have been a bat as the most perfect of birds in make v Sale's Qur'an ad loc and Hughes Dict of Islam

⁶ Hoping I suppose to be able to put off his religious exercises

Let the chosen usually applied to Muhammad here to Ali

⁷ What matters day or night? for when the Secret comes it is well whether it come by day or night L 'The soul-consuming yearning for the Secret is what is necessary not the question of night or day for in the rule of the search there is no captivity to time or season or day or night'' B

⁸ For the searchers halt not night or day' B

¹⁰ The word affection is not the same as that translated love it is used also of friendship Isolation is the separation or detachment from entanglements of the world and of sense thus almost renunciation' and their soul in their hand ¹ Lo, when they urge the Burāq ² of their 10 heart on towards Him, they cast all away under his feet, ³ they throw down life and heart in His path and make themselves of His company In the face of his belief in the Unity, there exists for him no old or new, all is naught, naught, He alone is What worth have reason and life in his eyes ² the heart and the true faith pursue the road together ⁴ The veil of the lovers is very transparent, the tracings on these veils are very delicate ⁵ Love's conqueror is he who is 15 conquered by love ⁶ 'love' inverted will itself explain this to thee ⁷

¹ i.e., they are amazed and confounded reason and soul escaping from within them

² The name of the animal which bore Muhammad on his night-journey to Heaven

^b كَبَابُ ku kab stirrup i.e. of the Burāq of their heart

⁴ "According to certain Sūfis the heart (mind dil) is superior to the spirit (soul rūh) and religion (dīn) to life (soul jān) for there are unbelieving souls and these according to the Qur'ān will die The jān ought therefore to possess religion (dīn) and faith (īmān) L

⁵ The veil is the mystery (مِرْ) of the lovers of God so subtle that its corporeal existence (كَيْفِيَّةٌ حَسَمِيَّةٌ) cannot be discerned and the characters on that veil are the secret matters that are far removed from explanation and comment and interpretation B

⁶ Or by God the pronoun used might refer either to love or to God Love (ishq) has been interpreted as the essence of God that is as the might of love in the lover increases the more utterly conquered does he become I

The strong men of love thou thinkest powerful it is not so for love has conquered them and they are overcome by his hand and none can conquer love B

⁷ Ishq love inverted becomes شَح the verbal noun qash being to disperse dispel as the wind disperses clouds and qash being an inconstant or frivolous fool B I think rightly having regard to the allusion to the clouds in the next line supposes the interpretation to lie in the first meaning (qash dispelling as equivalent to conquering and overcoming) I however refers to the derivation of qash a fool from whom reason has been taken away (dispelled) and observes that since the loss of reason is essential in love it is certain that love's conqueror will be conquered As L further observes 'love is again expressed here only by a pronoun which may not refer to love at all but to the preceding hemistich as a whole i.e. the converse of this (statement) will itself' The converse of course would be He who is conquered by love is love's conqueror "

When the clouds fall away from the Sun, the world of love is filled with light ¹ The cloud is dark and murky as a Magian, but water may be useful as well as harmful,—a little of it is man's life, but his life is destroyed by too much of it, so he who believes in the Unity is the beloved of His Presence, though affection, too, is a veil over His glory ²

20 He is not in evil plight to whom He addresses His instruction
What then is evil ¹—to be the friend who toils Look at the letters

¹ The clouds are this visible and phenomenal existence which hides the sun of Truth or Reality

Though the cloud of (mundane) existence which hides the sun of Reality be dark and murky still water the end for which it exists is beneficial though also at times noxious So with the Unitarian who is the friend of His Presence For though on the one hand affection (محب) is the origin of love (عشق) just as learning (علم) is the beginning of the knowledge (معرف) of God's essence—still on the other hand since it is a matter of relation and involves the duality of lover and beloved affection is a veil (which separates us from Him) L

Apparently following up the idea of the inferiority of mahabbat and by consequence of the muhibb (friendship and the friend) The distinction in this line the commentators would make to lie between the active and the passive states of which the passive is the more blessed and the muhaddath superior to the muhibb L pointing محدث defines it as one whom God most High purely by His compassionating mercy has chosen out and made the receiver of His holy communion Then taking in contrast the act part محدث as one who by struggling and endeavour and by traversing the stages of the journey wishes to attain the lofty dignity of converse with God he draws a parallel between these and the pair مخلص and مخلص of whom it is said in the Qur'ân

The whole of his lengthy argument especially the definition of the act part محدث seems to me to be somewhat far-fetched Is it not possible especially in view of the next line that there may be no depreciation of the muhibb as such intended? Might not محب محب is the friend who sees toil (labour pain trouble) be the friend who regards toil 't.c. considers it, takes it into consideration instead of looking on it as nothing or as a pleasure? And so ' Evil is the friend who calculates his trouble for the very characters of the words 'friendship and 'trouble are the same' friendship being equivalent to toil and trouble undertaken for one's friend of mahabbat (friendship), the very word mishnat (labour) is shown in its characters ¹ O thou who lovest ² the Beauty of the Presence of the Invisible, tell thou seek for the meeting with His face thou wilt never ⁴ drink the draught of communion with Him, nor taste the sweetness of inward converse with Him ⁸ Since thou knowest the One, and assertest the One, why search after the two, and three, and four? Together with alif go be and te,—count be and te an idol, and alif God ⁴

Continue to ply hand and foot in search, when thou reachest the sea, talk not of the rill ⁵ Since glory and shame have made of ⁵ thee a slave, O youth, what hast thou to do with the Eternal ⁶ Thou art but newly come into existence,—talk not of the Eternal,⁷ thou who dost not know thy head from thy foot There are a hundred

¹ The words differ only as the dot of the third letter is above or below

Again muhibb friend in view of the meaning (v next note) it is necessary to express an active sense though lover must be considered as appropriated to ūghayy

It is manifest an affection for His Beauty is to manifest an affection for one of His attributes only not for His Essence and is in opposition to the seeking for union with His Essence For there should be no distinction between Beauty and Majesty (i.e. the groups of attributes called by those names the merciful and the terrible) and the sight should be fixed on their origin only L

* Alif be and te being the first three letters of the Arabic alphabet be and te accompany alif the initial letter of Allah as His attributes accompany His Essence Be and te form the word but an idol and so His attributes are to be regarded if looked on and worshipped to the exclusion of His Essence As L puts it The two three and four are His attributes of which His Beauty is one in the contemplation of Essence plus attributes howsoever in truth the attributes are not disjoined from the essence the imagination of number remains but communion with the face of the Invisible is communion with the pure Essence disjoined from contemplation of the attributes whether of Beauty or of Majesty And the traveller in search of God is to count the attributes as idols and the Essence alone as God Again since thou believest and proclaimest God to be in truth One think Him not to be One numerically, for that is bounded and circumscribed He is one without number but to conceive Him as numerically one is to assert number of His Essence

Whoso desires to be lord of his isolation and whoso seeks to guard his seclusion,⁶ must take no ease within, nor adorn himself without,

—No that is the denial of all else than God is the nail-cutter which cuts off existence If the nail cutter be scissors the resemblance in shape to ʔ Lā ('No') is evident Otherwise [i.e. if a knife?]⁷ placing on one side the cutter on the other what is cut from the nail we have the same form ʔ in any case the comparison of ʔ Lā with the nail cutter is very good to which it may be said that a nail cutter is not a suitable implement for cleaning away rust the finger nail would be more suitable with which to scratch it off Accordingly B Lā is a nail with which to cut (ناحليست نريدة),⁸—but this is not what the text says

¹ With regard to thy impotence in polishing the mirror of the heart be not like the boat filled again and again with people crossing the river Admit not the thought (of thy impotence) to thy mind for so thou wilt give up striving and necessarily become a fatalist (yabari) L

⁵ تجرّد renunciation from the same root as and with similar meaning to تجرّد in the title of the last chapter تجرّد is used again in the first line of the present chapter

⁶ L distinguishes between تجرّد and تفرّد, both in ordinary use having the meaning of solitude or loneliness تجرّد is the cutting off of connections with externals (i.e. things of the world), and تفرّد the rejection of things pertaining to the inner man the mind (i.e., false knowledge) ⁷

that praise which is bestowed on outward seeming imports the abandonment of true praise and adornment¹ The beggar asks bread at the door of the king, so the lover begs food for 10 his soul On the path, naked² and fearless, he has cast water and fire and earth to the winds³ Standing on the plain of the signposts of time,⁴ what matter fools to him, what the philosopher of the age? L and B both interpret differently L gives no paraphrase but notes that او in the first hemistich refers to God in the second to the seeker He thus reads an izāfat before او in each case B following him paraphrases Till thou abandon thy attachment to things both inward and outward which are the praise and the adornment of the unspiritual thou wilt not obtain the sight of God whose commendation is the root of all praises It is hardly probable that او would have a different reference in the two hemistichs as supposed by the commentators nor is the interpretation of the first hemistich satisfactory Accordingly B next proposes to refer او in both cases to God till thou cease to care for adornment or commendation by God thou art not fit for the sight and praise of God that is in travelling along the stages of knowledge cherish no anxiety about thy reception or its manner and pursue not thy labours with a view to praise and adornment so that thou mayest obtain a true vision of God او باش and true praise Here too besides the improbability of the rendering, the paraphrase is not a fair interpretation of any possible meaning of the first hemistich I can see no objection to reading the line without the izāfat after او باش and the sense then connects immediately with the last words of the preceding line

Not in folly nor ignorance spoke Bāyazīd, if he said 'Glory to me'² so too the tongue that spoke the supreme secret moved truly when it said, 'I am God'³ When he proclaimed to the back the secret he had learned from the face,⁴ it became his executioner and killed him, his secret's day time became as night,⁵ but God's word was what he spoke,⁶ when in the midst of the rabble he suddenly 10

⁵ As the buttermilk drinker who feigns his intoxication keeps secret the fact that he has been drinking only buttermilk so refrain thou also from disclosing thy secret if thou hast drunk wine If it is the wine of reality it is not well to proclaim the secret and if earthly wine to tell it will cause thee to be blamed and disgraced L

L interprets differently He thus addresses the traveller on the path of the hereafter — Why seekest thou the path of God like the soul whose nature can never be comprehended by anyone ' (مانند جان که گدازد او بدرک کسی) (نمیشود راه حق را حسب و حوصله میبندی) It is not necessary that thou shouldst know the true nature of this path at first before thou settest foot on it Rather drink it like the faith which at first is a matter of conformity (نقلد)، hast eaten it, thou recognizest the taste ¹ When in this ruined hall thou drinkest a cup of wine, I counsel thee put not thy foot outside the house of thy drunkenness, lay down thy head where thou hast drunk the wine till thou hast drunk it, hold it an unlawful thing, and when thou hast drunk it rub a clod of earth on thy hips ² When with a hundred pains thou hast twice drunk the dregs, ³ I will say, Look at the man's courage ¹

and afterwards comes to be really present with one (به مرتبه شهود میرسد), i.e. deeming it good and wholesome put thy foot on the road of striving and austerity And God knows best if this is right This is unsatisfactory there is no hint of the search being for a path the context before and after being about wine L has to talk and makes the text talk of 'drinking' a path the search for one's own soul has not before been alluded to and to suppose a break at the end of the first hemistich (instead of taking چوں جان تو with the second) leaves نومدان awkwardly by itself without object

Again B - If thou wishest to be successful in the search for thy desire which is Reality as in the search for thy soul it will not be obtained at the first stage As it is difficult to find the soul in the body so also it is difficult to find Reality at the first stage Thus first thou must set out on thy quest without knowing His Reality As at first the faith is accepted in a conventional manner etc as I This is open to similar objections and is rather further from the text

Taking the text as it stands the search must be for wine and چوں جان تو must go with نومدان Hence the translation I have given the meaning being the exact opposite of B's interpretation Why seekest thou further? The wine is at hand not hard to get at like thy soul The line is unsatisfactory and I can see no reason for introducing جان in this connection A possible emendation would be نومدان for نوم دان -- نوم being plural of Arabic نومة a pearl so Why seekest thou (for anything better)? Know that it (the wine) is pearls (as precious) as thy soul

² i.e. keep silence about it B The lines refer primarily to earthly wine with a hint at the spiritual wine in the last hemistich "wine being unlawful for the orthodox Muslim hold it so—till thou drink it and then tell nobody

³ I think the emphasis is on the 'twice' i.e. if knowing what it is thou get drunk a second time thou art indeed a brave man

⁵ Thou needest a house in the street of the true religion and it will be well if to conceal thyself and destroy thy tracks thou make the lock (turn) to the left (کلداداں بچپ کنی, i.e. in the direction opposite to the usual one) that is reverse the horse's shoes (بعل وارگوئد کنی to mislead as to the direction taken) کلداداں is a wooden lock common everywhere especially in Ghazni. Merely to have a lock turning in the opposite direction would perhaps not be of much use بچپ may imply stratagem, deceit and in this sense I have translated it c/ p 10 l 19 inward communion with God, If, for that I am not far from Him, He give me leave to speak, and with just purpose ask, *To whom belongs the kingdom belongs to him who from yesterday and the day before has administered it, to-day and to-morrow Thy kingdom, O Mighty over 10

² L reading برسی بر خود و برسی comments When thou enterest the street of nothingness and humility thou hast naught further to do with the arriving at Self I and Self are far away from thee and since this is so thou wilt reach the Court of God and gain access to Him He mentions also a reading برسی برسی (thou wilt arrive at Self and wilt arrive at Him) which he explains thus - When by much striving and austerity thou attainest the essence of thy soul (or self حقیقت نفس) which is nothingness and arrivest at the secret of this thou wilt arrive at God and wilt discover the truth of Who knows himself knows his Lord B reading برسی برسی Abandonment of self is a road to which thou wilt not come by means of Self and since thou canst not get onto the beginning of the road thou wilt not arrive at God but I do not understand how he arrives at this paraphrase

The weight of evidence is for برسی at the end of the line and therefore probably by opposition for برسی at the beginning of the second hemistich And I think the confusion has arisen from a wrong conception of the meaning of hikāsa which is not here used as the commentators assume in the technical sense of nothingness abandonment of self or humility but in the more ordinary sense of bareness vileness

From the lengthy notes of the commentators on this line I extract the following premising that the Kufan refers to Abū Hanīfah an Nu'mān the founder of the Hanafī sect of Sunni Muslims and the Quraishite to ash Shāfi'ī, the founder of the Shāfi'ī sect called also al Muḥalibī from his descent from Muhammad's grandfather

What the Kufan imām has said of the mysteries and secrets of religion is only one sign out of all those that serve to describe the Ṣūfī state and is no more or the Ṣūfī and his love with 'Further, it is in the tradition,' with negation and affirmation, and 'It is lawful' and 'It is not lawful' ? The Ṣūfīs have lifted up their hands,¹ and for 'Yes' have substituted 'No' ² than a mark of his recondite knowledge. Hence it is not necessary that he should have been ignorant of all the Ṣūfī secrets but that he should have declared a little a verse of the Ṣūfī secrets that were known to him in order to veil those secrets from the vulgar. For those meanings and mysteries come not into the enclosure of recital and cannot be further indicated. L who also considers that the words كوفي and كوفي may incidentally have a reference to the Kufan āyat āyat being technically the mark put at the end of each of the verses of the Qur'ān. The Kufan āyat is a cipher with the letters لب (ليس آية المصري), 'This is not the end of the verse according to the school of Basra'. The school of Kūfa counts 6234 verses that of Basra 6204 the Kufan divisions are the ones generally followed (on the manner of marking verse-divisions and the prevalence of the Kufan readings cf Noldeke op cit pp 424 425).

Thus read the science of the knowledge of God on which thou wishest to travel perhaps thou imaginest it to be possible by the science of argument of external things. God forbid there is an absolute separation between the road of Love and that of outward knowledge and between the usages of the men of each of these. The Kufan may perhaps have looked on the Ṣūfī and the Ṣūfī path as something analogous to the marks in the Qur'ān the signs placed there on account of differences among the readers. God forbid that anything should result as regards Love from this discussing and disputing! For the differences of the marks are matters of human decision and intention. Kufan and Quraishite have no place in Love and words and calling to mind and being lawful and not being lawful and negation and affirmation as to the external questions of the law have no connection with it. Still they (i.e. the Kufan and the Quraishite) were not without a knowledge of the mysteries. It is only thou whose thought regarding the Qur'ān is that the Kufan āyat is so-and so and that the Quraishite has said so-and so and that the rival schools permit such and such things. Know however that they entered this valley and breathed of the mysteries. B

Would it not however be possible to translate the first hemistich. A text of the Qur'ān will make a Kufan doctor of a Ṣūfī 'i.e. a too rigid adherence to the literal text or discussing and disputing about it is fatal to the Ṣūfī and turns him into a formal theologian? Note in this connection H's reading كوفي which can only be 'an alif turned a Ṣūfī into a Kufan (theologian)

An ascetic fled from amongst his people, and went to the top of a 5 mountain, where he built a cell One day by chance a sage a learned man, wise and able passed by and saw the ascetic, so holy and devout Said he Poor wretch! why hast thou made thy dwelling and habitation and home upon this height? The ascetic said, The people of this world have been clean destroyed in their pursuit of it the hawk 10 of the world is on the wing, calling aloud in every country he speaks with eloquent tongue, seeking his prey throughout the world, ever calling on its people afflicted and parted from their lord "Woe to him who fears me not, who shows no anxiety to seek me" Let it not happen as in Fustāṭ —few birds and hawks in plenty ³

contrary the lines are to be read as a condemnation there is a reference to Qur 40 11 They shall say O Lord Thou hast killed us twice and Thou hast quickened us twice and we do confess our sins is there then a way for getting out? The first death is at the end of one's appointed time the first quickening is in the tomb (i.e. in order to be examined) the second death follows in the tomb and the second quickening at the resurrection thus when the second sentence of death is passed on thee in the tomb the embroidery workers of the eternal world will recite to thee the words and verses thou sangest in the world in passion and lust and then the true nature of thy acts will be brought before thee

As to the second death in addition to the explanation given by I v the notes in Palmer and Sale ad loc The first death may be interpreted as the first creation of man in a state of death or void of life and sensation the first birth is then the natural birth the second death the natural death and the second birth the resurrection

¹ The title of this section as given in most copies is somewhat as follows (from B) with variations in each of the several MSS etc. On the Obligations of the Five daily Prayers of Addresses to God Self-abasement and Humility and Modesty and calling upon God God Most High has said Those who believe in what is hidden and are steadfast in Prayer and the Prophet (on whom be Peace) said when near his Death And what your right hands possess and he said (Peace be upon him) Whoso at set purpose abandons Prayer is an Unbeliever and the Distinction between Islām and Unbelief is the Abandoning of Prayer and he said also Three things are dearer to me than this World of yours Fortune and Women and my chief Delight is in Prayer With regard to Muhammad's speech And what your right hands possess (i.e. your slaves cf Qur 4: 3 28 29 40 23) 31 33 33 49) this probably refers to a passage in Muhammad's address to the people on the occasion of his Farewell pilgrimage cf Muir op cit p 418 I have not been able to find this particular passage in b. Hi. lām or Tabar though the passages which in Muir precede and succeed it are given in both the authorities This particular sentence stands as it were for the farewell speech as a whole and the connection with prayer the subject of the present section then appears when it is remembered that Muhammad at this time declared the ordinances of Islām fixed for all future time and of these ordinances prayer of course is one (cf Muir loc cit) the last sentences of the speech at last I cannot understand its inclusion in the title otherwise

My chief delight is in the coolness of my prayer for a similar saying cf Muir op cit p 476 This last tradition does not form part of the title in I

I do not suppose that the original title comprised more than a few words — if indeed any of the sectional titles are original The rest of the title as found today in the MSS and lithograph has evidently been made up by the incorporation of sentences apropos of prayer written by pious readers in the margins of early copies

² Or comes forth out of contingent existence

the Lord of the divine Law, thy lower parts sunk in the water and thy nose in heaven ?¹

Thy beggar's food and cloak must both be pure, or thou wilt come to thy destruction in the dust, if food and raiment be not pure how is thy prayer better than a handful of dust ? Keep pure for the glory of God's service thy habitation and thy raiment and thy soul, the dog sweeps his lair with his tail, but thou sweepest not with sighs 20 thy place of prayer

Though all thou hast be spotless, yet is all polluted before God He who seeks Him makes use first of a bath, for God accepts not the prayers of the unclean, and how canst thou perform thy neglected 68 ablution so long as thy heart holds enmity and hatred ? Thy envy, anger, avarice, desire, and covetousness,—I marvel indeed if these will admit of thy coming to prayer ' Till thou banishest envy from thy heart, thou wilt never be free from its evil workings If thou hast not washed thyself free from blame, the mighty Lord will not receive thy prayer, but when thy heart draws thee out from thyself, 5 then true prayer rises up from thy destitution The whole of prayer lies in ablution and purification,² recovery from a grievous sickness depends on the use of remedies³

Until thou sweep the path with the broom of Not, how canst thou enter the abode of Except God ?⁴ So long as thou art under the dominion of the four, the five and the six,⁵ thou shalt not taste of wine save from the jar of lust Burn and destroy all else but God, cleanse thyself from everything but the true faith The soul's qibla 10 is the threshold of the Most High, the heart's Uhud is the sanc-

³ The two hemistichs of this line have no very evident connection I take it that the sickness is man's natural state, and purification the remedy to be applied

Come not in thy pride to prayer, take shame to thyself and stand in awe of God, him God receives in prayer who has no commanding dignity in his own eyes² Helpless, thou wilt be received with kindness, wanting for nothing, thy prayer will not be accepted
 15 Wanting for nothing, if thou give thyself the trouble of prayer, thou shalt consume thy liver fried in the pan with onions³ But if along with prayer goes helplessness, the hand of kindness shall raise the veil of the secret, then, speeding into the Court of God's kindness, he renders what is due, he obtains what he sought,⁴ and if it be not so,⁵ Ibls will hear thee when thou art at prayer and drag thee forth again

Thou camest abject, thy prayer is honoured thou camest as a 20 raw youth, thy prayer is as one of venerable age Know, that the seventeen rak'ahs of prayer given forth from the soul's heart are a kingdom of eighteen thousand worlds "a kingdom of eighteen thousand worlds belongs to him who performs the seventeen rak'ahs, and say not that this reckoning is too small,⁷ for seventeen is not far from eighteen "

¹ Uhud is the name of the site of one of the early battles of Isl'm where Muhammad and his forces were repulsed with great slaughter by the Moccans A.H. 3 Hamza Muhammad's uncle was one of the slain The heart's Uhud thus means the place where the self is to be sacrificed.

² صبی همد که بس با هدا دمدش در سه-ار نار خدای
 نار in the first hemistich = شرب B خدای in the sense of lord master

⁶ Seventeen is the number of rak'ahs or sections comprised in the obligatory prayers of one day as follows —two at morning prayers four at the noon four at the afternoon three at the sunset and four at the night prayers The eighteen thousand worlds refers to the tradition Verily God hath created eighteen thousand worlds and verily your world is one of them "

⁷ i.e. as I understand it that this number of prayers is too small to bring such a glorious reward

⁸ ' Know that the soul's heart is alif [i.e. one in reckoning by abyad alif is also the Arabic word for a thousand] When thou addest that the symbol for

Thy self esteem ¹ utters no prayer, for it sees no profit for thee in religion, while thy self esteem guides the reins I doubt indeed if it will ever come where Gabriel is Thy prayer will not admit thee to God if thou hast not purified thyself in indigence, thy purification lies in lowliness and selflessness, thy atonement in the slaughter of thy Self, and when thou hast slain thy Self upon the path, God's favour will quickly manifest itself Come in thy poverty if thou wouldst find admission and if thou do not so, then thou wilt quickly find thyself trebly divorced, ² for the prayer that is received into His presence has no concern with the pollution of worldly glory 5

When death drags forth thy life, then from thy indigence there springs true prayer when thy body has gone to the dust and spirit to the skies, then mayst thou see thy soul engaged as angels are, in prayer

ON THE PARTICIPATION OF THE HEART IN PRAYER

At the battle of Uhud 'Alī the Prince, the impetuous Lion, received a grievous wound The head of the arrow remained in his foot, and he knew that it was necessary to take it out this being the only cure for him As soon as the surgeon saw it, he said, "We must cut it open with a knife, to find the arrow head, a key must be applied to the closed wound" But 'Alī had no strength to bear the inser 15

the idea of one to seventeen eighteen results and thus thou obtainest the eighteen thousand worlds B I cannot follow B in his further elucidation of the a thor s meaning though I may perhaps be permitted to doubt if the author meant to imply all that seems there to be attributed to him

لَا تَقْبَلُ الثَّوَابَ ¹ whilst thou thyself retainest any worth thou canst utter no true prayer for thy self importance will not let thee see that there is any advantage in religion the first step in which is the laying aside of self and becoming poor

ثُمَّ ² irrevocably divorced A husband may take his wife back again after having divorced her once or twice But if he divorce her a third time she shall not be lawful unto him after that until she marry another husband' (Qur 2 230)

Or The shame or the pride and honour of the world gloss in I (حِجَابُ بَارِعَاتٍ وَ أَكْرَامٍ دُنْيَا) But B with بَارِعَاتٍ in a different meaning 'In it there appears nothing fresh or blooming splendid or shining In either case the izafat or some other particle is suppressed metre gratia.

tion of the forceps,¹ "Let it alone," said he, "till the time of prayer" So when he was engaged in prayer his surgeon gently took out the arrow head from his limb,² bringing it clear away while 'Ali was unconscious of any suffering or pain

- 20 When 'Ali ceased from prayer (he whom God called Friend), he said, "My pain is less,—how is that? And why is there all this blood where I have been praying?" Husain,³ the glory of the world, splendid above all the children of Muṣṭafā, answered him, "When 70 thou enteredst into prayer, thou wentest up to God, and the surgeon took out the arrow head before thou hadst finished thy prayer" Said the Lion, 'By the most great Creator, I knew nothing of the pain of it'

O thou, who art well known for thy prayers, who art commended before men for thy piety, pray in this wise and discern the interpretation of the story, or else rise, and cease vainly to wag thy beard

- 5 When thou enterest into prayer in sincerity, thou wilt come forth from prayer with all thy desire obtained but if without sincerity thou offer a hundred salutations,⁴ thou art still a bungler, thy work a

1 دَمِ کَر in the sense of point and کَر a two-bladed instrument, such as shears scissors, or forceps (Stein) The preliminary incision had apparently been made at this time and it was the subsequent extraction of the arrow head with forceps that 'Ali could not bear

2 The texts all read لطف اندامش omitting از evidently understanding برداشت here as above as 'to cut he cut into that graceful body of his. But v l. 16 sup where دَمِ کَر can hardly be anything else than the point of the forceps i.e. the cutting had already been done and it was this that had so exhausted 'Ali that he could not bear any more pain at the time Moreover reading لطف اندامش there is an hiatus between the two words which (though allowable) is awkward and has evidently been felt so since M reads مبارک for لطف thus avoiding it It seems justifiable therefore to retain the sense of the passage and improve the form of the line by reading از برد with از in the sense of 'sever remove' But the readings in ll. 14 15 and 18 vary considerably and it is difficult to frame an exact picture of the steps of the operation.

3 His son, the martyr of Karbalā. As a matter of fact, Husain was born the year after Uhud.

4 سلام, the technical name for the last of the prescribed sentences to be uttered on each occasion of prayer Thus here 'a hundred salutations' is the equivalent of 'a hundred prayers.'

failure One salutation is the same as two hundred,¹ one prostration in sincerity is worth thy standing erect² a hundred times, for the prayer that is mere matter of custom is dust, that is scattered by the wind. The prayers that reach God's court are those that the soul prays, the mere mimic is ever a mendicant, praying unworthily, 10 without intelligence, since he chooses the path of folly. For on this Path prayer of the spirit is of more account than barren mimicry.

When thou callest on God, bring supplication meet for Him, that His good pleasure may receive thee. From time to time, divided from the real and bound up in the phenomenal, thou comest to pray the obligatory prayers,³ calling not on God, without self-abasement, without humility, thou carelessly performest a rak'ah or two. Thou 15 deemest it prayer,—I marvel if thou art listened to at all! Thou comest before God in thy pride,—how shall God hear thee when thou callest? Let thy prayer be free from Self, and He will accept it as pure, if it be smirched with Self He will not receive it. The message that the tongue of anguish utters is an envoy from this world of men to Him, when it is thy helplessness that sends the messenger, thy cry is 'O Lord', and His is 'Here am I'.

As a proud lord marches to the arms of his servants and slaves 20 so thou layest the load of obligation on Him,—“I am Thy friend,” sayest thou, “honour be mine!” Thou deemest thyself a friend, not a slave, is this the manner of a man of wisdom? Better were 71 it, O son, that thou offer not such service to Him, go, strive not with Him. Without right guidance man is less than a beast, whose is without guidance labours in vain.

¹ i.e. one salutation performed in sincerity is worth two hundred that are merely conventional. Or one salutation is just as good as two hundred if both are without sincerity.

Have done with this service, thou fool ! Never again call thy self a slave ! If thou wert mighty in the world thou wouldst say 5 what Pharaoh did, every word ¹ who in his surpassing fatuity, and his supreme insolence and folly, averse from service and submission, drew aside the veil from before his deeds,² saying, “ I am greater than the kings, I am above the princes of the world ” All have this insolence and pride, Pharaoh’s words are instinct in everyone but daring not through fear to utter their secret, they hide it away even from themselves

ON FAILURE TO PRAY ARIGHT

Bā Shu aib al Ubayy was a leader in religion whom everyone used to praise, one who rose in the night and fasted continually one who was distinguished in that age for his asceticism He betook himself from the city to a cell on the mountain, and made his escape from pain and sorrow ⁴

It chanced that a certain woman had an affection for him, she 15 said “ O Shaiikh ⁵ would it be fitting for thee to have a wife ? If thou wilt I place myself at thy disposal, and will willingly become thy wife, my soul will cheerfully be satisfied with little and I shall never think of my former ease ” He answered, “ Excellent, it is very fitting, I approve If thou art satisfied, I am content ”

She was a modest woman called Jauhara, and had a full share of beauty and grace, chaste, refined,⁶ of sweet disposition and in 20 carnation of good deeds ⁷ content with the decree of the revolving heavens, she left the city for the hermit’s cell, and there seeing a piece of matting lying on the floor, she straightway took it up The

For the black earth is only the place for our shoes" ¹ She said, "I did it because it was best so, for I have heard you say that any act of devotion is best performed when no screen interposes, and the mat was an obstacle between my forehead and the actual earth" ²

Every night Bu Shu'aib's daily meal consisted of two round cakes for his querulous belly,⁸ with these two barley cakes that pious man broke his fast and was always content. But he fell ill from the rigors that so afflicted his nights,⁴ and so being helpless⁵ the good man, because of the weakness brought on by fasting, said the jarz and sunnah prayers⁶ that night sitting. His wife laid one cake before him and gave him a drop of vinegar,—nothing more. Said 10 the Shaikh “O wife, my allowance is more than this! Why is it so little, wife! She said, “Because the worshipper who says his prayers sitting receives only half the full reward and if thou sttest to say thy prayers, thou eatest the half of thy usual allowance. Ask no more from me, O Shaikh than half thy dole. I have warned thee. For the portion that belongs to prayers said sitting is the half of the reward given for those said standing, why expect the reward of the 15 whole when thou performest but half thy devotions? Perform the whole and then ask for the whole reward, otherwise such worship is absolutely wrong.”

ON TURNING TO GOD

O Creator of the world, who preservest the soul in beauty, O Thou who guident the understanding to the path of true devotion, in the Paradise of the skies they are all raw youths, in Thy Paradise are 78 those who drink of Hell¹ What are good and ill to me at Thy door² What is Heaven to me when Thou art there² Who can show forth in this deceptive mirror³ the import of the words "All-knowing" and "All powerful"⁴

When the heart's blood bores the liver, what is Hell, what a baker's live coal⁵ Hell would become Heaven through fear of 5 Him, how can clay become a brick without a mould⁶ Those who

¹ B explains the Paradise of the skies as the Paradise of the temporal delights described by the theologians Thy Paradise is God Himself and His radiant face :c His approval of and kindness towards His servants the bestowal of blessings which cannot be imagined. This Paradise is what those seek who drink of Hell :c those who give their heads in the wādī of knowledge and search who in their search experience a hell of hardship, whose souls are as a thousand fire-temples with the flame and blaze of love of the True Beauty to them the other Paradise is nothing

² What have I to do with distinction of good and ill? The Court of Glory is not concerned with that there is naught else there but Theo" B

³ :c the world full of deceptions B

عرس نكته علم و دندر, the explanation of the attributes of God by means of earthly teaching and the suitable particularization of the meanings of His names according to the special signification of each Hence because of this impossibility the variations and differences both verbal and of meaning which have arisen as to the interpretations of the names of God But such contradictions will disappear hereafter when we are united to Theo for there where Thou art none of these words (نكته) exist nor does the question of their meanings sully that place ' B

⁵ i.e. what difference is there between Hell and a baker's live coal? "To those whose livers are burnt who are bored through by love, Hell with all its fire and flame is no more than a spark that is extinguished," B.

⁶ "So too the life of the Knower becomes not perfect without the disposing power of the Master" B. The connection with the preceding hemistich is not, however, very clear love Thee weep in their laughter because of Thee, those who know Thee laugh in their weeping because of Thee¹ They rest in Paradise who are in Thy fire,² but the most are contented apart from Thee with the maidens of the eyes³ If Thou send me from Thy door to Hell, I will not go on foot but on my head,⁴ but whoso opposes Thy decree, his soul shall hold up a mirror to him, because of his recklessness⁵

His standing and his occupation Thou givest to everyone, a friend is a snake,—a snake a friend if sent by Thee Though threatened with “None will think himself secure,” I cannot have enough of Thee, nor do I become bold because of “Be not in despair”⁶ If Thou givest poison to my soul, I cannot mention anything bitterer than sugar” He only is secure from Thy craft who is mean and

² حديم, also a name for Hell Those who are in the fire of trial and seeking are as it were reposing in Paradise for that fire is their souls’ peace and rest B

³ The maids with modest glances with bright and large eyes of Qur 55 That is they are contented with the ‘Paradise of the skies’ and its delights as described in sensual language

⁴ i.e. with absolute submission. If Thou send me from Thy door to Hell—if Thou so approve—I will make my head my foot and go for that Hell will not be Hell Thy decree will give me such delight that Hell will become Heaven ‘B

⁵ دل خود از عقلش عالى آرد, i.e. “the delight of being accepted by God shall be reversed in his experience (as the image in a glass is reversed) that is his state shall become Hell and naught but Hell shall be the outcome” B Or taking عالى in the more usual meaning we might interpret “his soul makes his recklessness a cover for him” to harden him still further and make him more refractory

⁶ The references are to Qur 7 96. “But none will think himself secure from the craft of God except the people who perish” and Qur 39 54. “Be not in despair of the mercy of God verily God forgives sins all of them.”

⁷ i.e., the poison is so sweet that sugar by comparison is the bitterest thing possible. Or, ‘I can say nothing bitterer, no bitterer word than sugar,’ i.e., ‘it is sugar’ ‘L.

lowly, Thy peace and Thy craft appear alike,¹ but at Thy craft the wise man trembles. We must not think ourselves secure against Thy 15 craft, for neither obedience nor sin is of avail,² he only thinks himself secure, who knows not Thy craft in dealing with wickedness

HE WHO TRUSTS IN HIS SUBMISSION SUFFERS A MANIFEST HURT

An old fox said to another "O master of wisdom and counsel and knowledge, make haste, take two hundred dirams, and convey our letter to these dogs." He said, "The pay is better than 20 a headache, but it is a heavy and perilous task, when my life has been spent in this venture, what use will your dirams be then?"

A feeling of security against Thy decree, O God, is, rightly understood, the essence of error, it made both 'Azāzīl and Bal'ām in famous³

¹ 'Thy peace and Thy craft are to outward appearance alike the craft consists in following up Thy servant with benefits and then seizing him in a way of which he is unaware. He is the wise man who can distinguish between Thy peace and Thy craft' L

² "For often sin inasmuch as it is a cause of repentance and turning to God is by His mercy esteemed as equal to obedience and obedience because of the pride to which it gives rise, by His wrath as on the same level as sin and so since even sin is not without its advantage both sin and obedience are here mentioned together' L

³ The fox would not have escaped injury, though obedient obedience is no guarantee against suffering. Or as B says — 'A confidence which arises from trusting in one's obedience is in the matter of God's decrees sinful for the divine decree is not restrained by obedience nor permitted by the commission of a fault. Hence Azāzīl with all his submission and Bal'ām with all his piety and dignity of priesthood were rejected at the Court of Majesty.' I cannot say in what the apposteness of these references consists. 'Azāzīl, as before is probably Iblis who was expelled from heaven for refusing to worship Adam. Balaam is not mentioned in the Qur'ān but the Jalālam (v Hughes s v Balaam) say 'that he was a learned man among the Israelites who was requested by the Canaanites to curse Moses at the time when he was about to attack the Jabbārūn or 'giants' a tribe of Canaanites. Balaam at first refused to do so but at last yielded when valuable presents were made to him'

Say, "Grind sleep under the foot of the horsemen of thy thought" for this is of Thy Court¹ When Thou strikest off the head of him in whom Self no long dwells, he rejoices in Thee, like a candle² If I have Thee, what care I for intellect, and honour, and gold³ Thou art both world and faith, what care I for aught else⁴ Do Thou give me a heart, and then see Thou my valour, call me to be Thy fox, and see how like a tiger I shall be⁵ If I fill my quiver with Thy arrows I grip Mount Qāf by loins and armpits⁶ Thou art his Friend who is not knowledgeable,⁷ Thou belongest to him who belongs not to Self No one who regards Self can see God he who looks at Self is not one of the faith, if thou art a man of the Path and of the true religion, cease for a time to contemplate thyself

O God, Omnipotent, Forgiving, drive not Thy servant from Thy door, make me Thy captive, take away my indifference,⁸ make me athirst for Thee,—give me not water⁹ Why should I seek my soul in this or that¹⁰ my pain itself leads me to Thee, my goal

¹ 'This is the thought Sleep' is the sleep of indifference in the house of sorrows (دار المحن, i.e. the world) The thought is the thought of Reality (خيال حقيقي) referring to those delights of thought which the knowers of God experience in thinking of His Essence B

² As a candle burns more brightly (here compared to rejoicing hi laughing) when its head is struck off i.e. when snuffed

³ The fox being a weak animal so if I am one of Thy weak ones I shall be brave enough

⁴ Mount Qāf being the mountain that in the popular view encircles the world It consists of eight circular mountain chains which "alternate with the seven seas the innermost Qāf being within the innermost of the seas which bears the name of the Encircling Ocean' (Bahr-i-mulūt) The breadth of each Qāf and of each sea is a five hundred years journey (Gibb, op cit p 38) For a reference to the Bahr-i-mulūt see ibid p 80 l. 3 The metaphor in the text is mixed, 'if I fill my quiver with Thy arrows is equivalent to if I draw my strength from Thee

⁵ "Who knows Thee, who has the knowledge of the Knowers the Sūfis the Saints,—not the knowledge of externals or the knowledge of the philosophers" B

Like an ass without headstall before its greens,¹ thou now beginnest to employ thy worthless life Thou idly wanderest from city to city, 15 seek thy ass on that road where thou hast lost it² If they have stolen thy ass from thee in 'Irāq, why art thou to be seen in Yazd and Rai?

Till thou becomest perfect, there is a bridge for thee, when thou hast become perfect, what matters sea or bridge to thee³ Let thy burden on this road be thine own right-doing and knowledge,⁴ and

² L states that the word ass is a sort of peg (مناط معتق) often used in examples in grammar in the same way as 'Zaid' and 'Bakr' (words used independently of their meaning, and standing for whatever may be required) He proceeds 'Here it is equivalent to 'the strayed animal of the believer' for 'Wisdom is the strayed animal of the believer' and this wisdom is the faith given to the prophets the righteous and the faithful This faith he lost in that other state of existence (or as B paraphrases L here that first state of existence نشأة الأولى, the world of incorporeal beings عالم معنويات, the angel world) and seeks in this And the conventional believer (مقلد) or the unbeliever who has not lost the faith seeks for nothing and if in imitation he does seek since he does not know what it is like he will not recognise it when he finds it Hence the meaning of the text —Why dost thou wander in folly from city to city? What thou hast lost in that state of existence comes not to thee in this world of plurality except having abandoned the plurality and appurtenances of this transient existence in perfect strenuousness thou turn thy face towards that other state of existence thy lost goal so mayest thou find the object that thou seekest And as is said in the next line if thou hast lost thy religion in that state of existence what seekest thou here? Return thither And God knows best what is right

On this passage of Gibb op cit p 56 sq 'The human soul is a spirit and therefore by virtue of its own nature in reality a citizen of the Spirit World Its true home is there and thence for a certain season it descends into the Physical Plane where to enable it to act upon its surroundings it is clothed in a physical body So long as it is thus swathed in corporeity the soul ever consciously or unconsciously seeks to regain its proper world etc.'

³ Till thou become altogether of God attainest to the degree of completeness in God when all contingent existences become parts or members of thee there is a bridge for thee, for thou hast many obstructions and hindrances in the path of thy journey But when thou art complete bridge and ocean are the same to thee and the obstructions great or small that stood in the way of thy arriving can no longer hinder thy union with God'' L

trouble not thyself about any bridge Make not for the boat, for it is not safe, he who goes by boat knows nothing of the sea, it would be a strange sight to see a duck, however young and inexperienced, seeking for a boat¹ Though a duckling be born but 20 yesterday, it goes up to its breast in the water Be thou as a duck,—reign the stream, fear not the fordless sea's abyss the duckling swims in the midst of the sea of 'Umān, whence the ignorant boatman turns back O Lord, for the honour of Adam,² 80 confound these fools of the world³

If thou maintain thy foot in the path of the Eternal, thou wilt hold the sea in thy hand, the surface of the outer encircling ocean⁴ is a bridge to the foot that speaks with the Eternal⁵

[OF HIS MERCY]⁶

Malice and rancour are far removed from His attributes for hate belongs to him who is under command It is not permissible 5

¹ Though the journeyer be young and new in his surroundings he must be like a duck in swimming in the spiritual ocean and a duck that sought for a boat i.e. in this case a traveller who on the path was in bondage to the customs and habits of this world would be a strange sight So the wayfarer must abandon these and swim on the sea of Truth without the help of the things of this world ' L

to speak of anger in respect of God, for God has no quality of anger,¹ anger and hatred are both due to constraint by superior force, and both qualities are far distant from God. Anger and passion and reconciliation and hatred and malice are not among the attributes of the one sole God, from God the Creator all is mercy, He is the Veiler² of His slaves, of His mercy He gives thee counsel, He draws thee to 10 Himself by the kindness of the noose³ If thou comest not, He calls thee towards Himself. He offers thee Paradise in His kindness but because thou livest in this abode of sorrow thou of thy folly hast taken the road of flight. Thou art as a shell for the pearl of the belief in the Unity thou art a successor of the newly created Adam,⁴ if thou lose that pearl of thy belief, in being dispossessed of it thou wilt be parted from thy substance, but if thou guard that pearl 15 thou shalt raise thy head beyond the seven and the four,⁵ thou shalt reach eternal happiness, and no created thing shall harm thee, thou shalt be exalted in the present time, and upon the plain of eternity thou shalt be as a hawk, thy alighting place shall be the hand of kings, thy feet shall be freed from the depths of the mire.

OF HIM WHO FEEDS ME AND GIVES ME DRINK⁶

When they capture the hawk in the wilds, they secure it neck and 20 feet, they quickly cover up both its eyes and proceed to teach it to hunt. The hawk becomes accustomed and habituated to the strangers, 81 and shuts its eyes upon its old associates, it is content with little food and thinks no more of what it used to eat. The falconer then becomes its attendant, and allows it to look out of one corner of an eye, so that it may only see himself, and come to prefer him before all others From him it takes all its food and drink, and sleeps not for a moment apart from him Then he opens one of its eyes completely, and it looks 5 contentedly, not angrily, upon him, it abandons its former habits and disposition, and cares not to associate with any other And now it is fit for the assembly and the hand of kings, and with it they grace the chase Had it not suffered hardship it would still have been intractable, and would have flown out at everyone it saw

¹ How then asks L, explain the passages of the Qur'ān where God is spoken of as hating? They refer to the just punishment of man not the rage of animal strength which is reprobated.

Others are heedless,—do thou be wise, and on this path keep thy tongue silent The condition laid on such an one is that he should 10 receive all food and drink from the Causer, not from the causes ¹ Go, suffer hardship, if thou wouldst be cherished, and if not be content with the road to Hell None ever attained his object without enduring hardship till thou burn them what difference canst thou see between the willow and aloes wood ²

OF THE MULTITUDE, THEY ARE LIKE CATTLE—NAY THEY ARE MORE ERRING ³

On the colt that is full three years old the breaker puts the saddle and bridle he gives him a training in manners, and takes his restive- 15 ness out of him, he makes him obedient to the rein,—what is called a handy horse Then he is fit for kings to ride, and they deck him with gold and jewels

If that colt had not experienced these necessary hardships, he would have been of less use than an ass, only fit to carry millstones, and would have been perpetually in pain from his loads, bearing now 20 the Jew's baggage, now the Christian's in pain and sorrow and tribulation

The man who has never undergone hardship has not, so think the wise, received a full measure of blessing, he is Hell's food, is in terror, even in Hell he is no more than a stone,⁴ his is the place of fear 82

¹ i.e. recognise all blessings as coming from the Causer of causes the First Cause God not from any of His secondary manifestations.

² Aloes wood when burnt giving out a fragrant smell.

Though thou canst neither purpose nor compass aught without Him, yet religion's task is not to be accomplished without thee, any more than without Him,³ religion's task is not an easy business, God's religion is always a thing of heaviness⁴ God's religion is a man's crown and diadem, does a crown befit a worthless man? Guard thy religion, so mayest thou attain thy kingdom,⁵ otherwise, know that without religion thou art a man of naught. ⁸ ذوق is tasting trying probing also the distinction of truth and falsehood by the light of divine grace

⁹ برای, the animal on which Muhammad took his night-journey to heaven is, the bright one 'After passing the various steps and stages of the journey

become a prison to him, his soul seeks freedom, a fire is kindled within him, which burns up soul and reason and religion¹

So long as he seeks for love with self in view, there waits for him the crucible of renunciation, whoso has newly undertaken the way of love, his renunciation is the key of the gate. Desire, when it is joined to its mistress, is gladness, but he who seeks mistress is far from God. The legion of thy pleasures will cast thee into the fire, the following 15 out of thy desire for God will keep thee safe as a virgin of Paradise

Then when the soul sets forth from the gate, the old heart becomes new thereat, his form escapes from the bonds of nature, the heart gives back its charge to the spirit². From earth to God's throne comes forth a mighty shout by reason of his soul's progress, the dust raised by the wind of his desire and pain turns woman into man if it but pass by her³. All that would cause him trouble in his way quits the path 20 before him, before him the mountains in fear become coloured wool for his socks, the fire in him destroys the glory of the sea for the sake of his upward ascent. Because of the labour of his search Gabriel unceasingly bathes his face in the water of life Understanding is bewildered by his soul's shout, devils become firewood for the lightning of his horse's hoofs, to pursue the path his pained heart¹ would burn mankind with fire of sighs None of the contented² can know the secret of his sigh, none pious with earthly piety³ can ever find his footprints When his horse's hoof scatters the dust, Gabriel makes of it a life-giving fragrance,⁴ as he makes towards the world of annihilation the wind cries 'Halt a moment',⁵ Mustafā⁶ standing by his path in benevolence calls out 'O Lord, keep him safe'⁷ Because of his high dignity God suspends the scales of justice from his heart, the friend of God⁸ sprinkles water in his path, Gabriel's self cracks the whip⁹

¹⁰ مقرر, "the decree existing in the Divine mind from All eternity, and the execution and declaration of the decree at the appointed time" Stein

speaks is also by decree, ¹ infidelity and faith, good and evil, old and new,—all is referable to Him, whatso exists, is under the command of the Almighty, all things work in accordance with the decree All are in subjection,—His Omnipotence the subduer, His creative Power appears high above all All is subject to His Omnipotence, dependent 20 on His mercy, all were preceded in time by His eternal Omniscience The man of the people, or he of the philosophers, he who is under command, or who is of the learned,—all must return to His Presence whoso possesses power, it is of His favour His causes have displaced 84 Reason from her position, ² His methods of deriving one thing from another have cut off the soul's feet -

Through the instrumentality of thy reason He has given to thy petitioning both the commands of religion and the understanding that belongs to this present life عمل دینی being the equivalent of عمل مکی Or عمل in the first hemistich not having the izāfat and the address being to God not to man 'I have given to our petitioning through the instrumentality of the Universal Reason (عمل کل = عمل) both the commands L

¹ امر, God's decree may be interpreted as equivalent to عالم امر the world of command // the world of incorporeal beings the angel world the world of meanings (عالم معانی) So whatso springs up in this world of mankind originates in the world of meanings and what the prophet utters also originates there I As to the various worlds or planes of existence I may refer to Gibb op cit pp 55-56 As he says the accounts we have of them are confused and differ more or less in the different authorities Here in L s note the world of fixed prototypes (world of meanings —the true meanings which underlie names and the outward show of things) the world of might and the angel world (world of similitudes) are treated as one —the Ālam-i-malakūt opposed to the Ālam-i-mulk the five worlds being reduced, as often to two The idea of the text is that which Gibb expresses thus (p 56) — The world of similitudes is so called because in it exist, ready to be materialized the forms which are to be actualized on the Physical Plane The number of these which are so actualized at any given time is in proportion to the whole 'as a little ring in the midst of a vast desert'

² "In the world of causes, the Causeur of causes has no set causes in action that Reason has been removed from her place Or His causes have made an old rag (بعل) of Reason' i.e. Reason is as an old rag powerless to comprehend them" B

³ إساش, isāsh used of tracing an individual's descent the meaning of the sentence is that the soul is unable to follow His methods of working

The soul's relation to the world of life ¹ is like a blind man and a pearl of 'Ummān ² One showed a pearl to a blind man, the greedy fool asked him, 'How much wilt thou give for this pearl?' ³ He said,
 5 'A round cake and two fishes, for no one can discern ruby or pearl,— why be angry?—except by the pearl of the eye So, since God has not given me this pearl, ⁴ do thou take away that other pearl, and talk no more folly If thou dost not wish to be laughed at by the ass, take thy pearl to one who is skilled in pearls, as soon as he puts the sole of his foot upon the oyster, his art knows well its value' ⁵ Under standing is a tent before His gate, the soul a soldier in His army ⁶
 10 the soul from fear of being rejected by Him sweeps not the dust of His Court except by permission all in place and time are His property, from the Be of His decree to the wicket of 'It was' His decree has commanded the service of His Court to all intelligences in the words 'Obey God', from the vegetative to the reasonable soul ⁷ all like slaves are seeking Him

Well thou knowest that on the plain of eternity without beginning works the hand of the creative power of God, the Great and Glorious God's decree has caused power in every sphere to become pregnant 15 with act,¹ so that when the way of the membranes is opened, there comes forth that wherewith they were pregnant² How shall Existence rebel against Him, to whom non Existence is obedient? One word of command awakened the Universe,³ all things came together into the circle⁴

The soul that obeys the command, and commands, the intelligence that understands the Qur'ān and gives us our faith, wisdom, and 20 life, and abstract form⁵—know that all proceed from the decree, and the decree from God When the sun's light falls upon the water, the quiet water is stirred into activity,⁶ the sun's reflection from the water falls upon the wall and paints the ceiling with beauty, know 85 that that too, that second reflection, of the water on the wall is a reflection of the sun

(Nefs-i Haywanīya) and the 'Soul Reasonable' (Nefs-i Nātiqa) The first which corresponds to what we should call the vital principle is shared in common by plants brutes and man its functions are growth nourishment and reproduction The second which represents the principle of sensation or perception is confined to brutes and man its functions are sensation and voluntary movement The third the principle of reason belongs to man alone

⁵ Abstract or absolute form corresponds to 'corporeal form' شکل مادی, v n on p 85 l. 14 The first two of the expressions in the text I take to refer to the human soul which only by obedience is fitted for rank and command in the spiritual world and the human reason respectively 'wisdom' and 'life' may refer as L appears to think, to the Universal Reason and Universal Soul

⁶ The reflecting of the sun's light being conceived of as due to the active operation of the water

⁷ آلهم ابر عكس اقداب شمار آلهم ابر عكس آف آلهم ابر عكس آف L considering that آلهم and آلهم may refer to different things would relate آلهم to آلهم lines previously which being one of the names of God is a manifestation of His Essence آلهم would then be the sun of Truth, of Real Existence ()

He has caused all things to return to Himself, for none can escape from Him. All things are, yet all are far from All, thou hast read in the Qur'ān "All things return"¹ From Him are evil and good, power and might,² "the sentence is not changed" is His decree³ His decree changes not man can only stand in wonder before it⁴

(حقيقي), and امر آں دوم would be, the decree, the origin of understanding and soul and life and abstract form. The meaning would then be 'Know that the Truth as a name of God is a reflection of the sun of True Being and the decree is the reflection of the water on the wall'. But the comparison seems to be between God the decree and all created things, on the one hand and the sun the reflection in the water and the light on the wall on the other.

¹ Qur 42 13 Shall not all things return unto God? All in the first hemistich of this line is alternately 'all created things' and 'God' who is all. All creation though it possesses contingent existence is far from God and must return to Him or, all things are contingencies of true Existence and only externally have an (independent) existence but from the All all multiplicity and plurality is far distant for all springs from Unity and to Unity must return, as is said in the second hemistich L

² "If بیک be read without the 1:āfat the meaning is that the bringing into being of bad and good which is here credited to God is (by) His power and might i.e. His power and might are the origin (مصدر) of both good and bad deeds not that the bad and good which are referable to His servants are of Him but that He gives the strength and power to perform them. This is in accordance with the beliefs of the Mu'tazila. If we read بیک with the 1:āfat (from Him are the evil and the good wrought by strength and power) then it means that the bad and good we do is of God for our power and strength is of him'. I who thus appears somewhat ineffectually to distinguish between the being of God (ارو) and the having an ultimate source (مصدر) in God. For the sect of the Mu'tazila \ Sale, Prel Disc Sect VIII Hughes Dict of Islam s.v. and especially Browne's Literary History of Persia, vol 1, pp 281—289. ³ Qur 50 28 The sentence is not changed with me nor am I unjust to my servants

⁴ On this L remarks — The first statement requires explanation for in appearance many changes take place such as the abrogation of various religions the change of qibla etc. The explanation is that His decree which is fixed in His eternal Omniscience and of which these changes are the result is not susceptible of change or we may say that every change which happens is again according to His decree and the changes in His commands take place by the decree of none other than Himself. Which explanation is very fitting for (Qur 2 100) Whatever verses we cancel or cause thee to forget we bring a better or

He is all powerful to do whatso He shall desire , whatso He wills, He does, for His is the dominion He who, invested with His authority, is in His secrets, and he whom He compels to be His slave,—all are subjected or exalted according to His decree Mankind heed not the good or evil , as to whatso has been, and whatso shall be, that only can they do which He commands All that the Master 10 has written and set forth, the boy in school cannot but read , if from His records He has written out a certain alphabet, he cannot turn his head away from it Whether thou existest or not is naught to the workings of God in the path of His might and power all is God's work,—happy is he who knows it

Reason became the pen,¹ the soul the paper , matter received form, and body was transformed into individual shapes² To Love 15 He said, 'Fear none but me', to Reason, 'Know thyself' Reason is us like so that in truth there has been no change except in mercy something better was given in exchange and so mankind can but wonder at the absence of change in the decree of the Essential and at the changes in the phenomenal

(عدم بغير امر حقيقي وبعبارات معاري)

¹ The author's text has suffered very severely in this portion and the preceding chapters (from the one I have called Of His mercy) have needed a very large amount of rearrangement in order to exhibit even as much consecutiveness of thought as is displayed in the above translation There remains over the present passage which does not seem to me to fall into place in any of these The passage which follows this was similarly left over from an earlier chapter (On Laud and Praise)

² 'Reason is the Universal Reason soul is the reasonable soul نفس باطنة

B Reason is the active agent the soul the passive object Reason cause: the effect the soul is what it acts on. Matter it makes susceptible of receiving bodily form and body (جسم) which is compounded of matter and form it makes susceptible of receiving various outlines L Cf Gibb op cit, p 45 Within the hollow of the Sphere of the Moon lies the elemental world The basis of this is no longer ether but Matter' (Heyula) [in the text māya] and immanent in 'Matter' is Form' (Súrat), without which its actualized existence is impossible. Form is in two degrees 'Corporeal Form' (Súret-i Jamiye) and

'Specific Form' (Súret-i Nev iye). Matter in combination with the first of these produces Body in the Abstract' (Jiam-i Mutlaq) and this in combination with the second produces the Individual Body ever Love's vassal Love's point of honour lies in scorning life¹ To Love He said, 'Do thou rule as king', to human nature² He said, 'Live thou in thy household, in sorrow make the elements thy food, and afterwards take in thy hand the water of life' So that when the reasonable soul³ has made of it⁴ her riches, and expends it in the 20 path of the Holy Spirit, that Holy Spirit rejoices in the soul, and the soul becomes pure as the Primal Reason⁵ This is the soul's progress from life's beginning to its end⁶

² عقل ا.ع., apparently used as the equivalent of the preceding عمل H writes عقل

نفس باطنه ا.ع., بطى

⁴ ا.ع. the water of life

⁵ عمل كلّ ا.ع. عقل The passage is the occasion of a long commentary by L and, following him B 'After the acquisition of eternal life and the characters of perfection and the employment (توظيف) - expending) of these in the path of the Holy Spirit (either Gabriel or more literally the Spirit of God (روح الله), the Holy Spirit dilates (توسيع), ا.ع. becomes expanded and rejoiced because of the soul which has come to possess the characters of perfection. Or by the holy spirit (روح قدسى) may be meant that partial (جزئى) soul which is in relation to the human body then the interpretation will be that when this sanctified spirit returns (تعود), the same words in a different sense as those previously translated rejoices) to the Soul ا.ع. in this explanation the Universal Soul then the reasonable soul (ا.ع. that sanctified spirit) becomes pure and stainless and free from taint like Reason (عمل or عمل كلّ the Universal Reason) Another reading is روح قدسى نفس تار شد نفس چون عمل بر کنار شد

'the Holy Spirit becomes the soul's friend soul and reason alike have then reached the end.'

⁶ From its beginning as the partial soul to its end in the Universal Reason (B paraphrases L as usual but here substitutes Universal Soul') the road and path is thus ا.ع. as has been related in the preceding verses. Or 'life's beginning' may be the material reason (عقل مادي), which is a property of the reasonable soul (لواحوال نفس باطنه ا.ع.), and life's end the Real Truth which is above acquired understanding (بالا بر او عمل المستفاد ا.ع.) L

In view of thy religion to fly from poetry is better,—to shatter 86 thy verse as thou wouldst an idol,¹ for religion and poetry, though at present they are on an equality, are utterly foreign to each other.²
The things that are permitted to us, are forbidden to one who is ignorant of both of these,³ he appreciates the difference between prohibition and permission who looks on ease in the light of a wound.⁴

¹ The words religion and poetry occurring in this and the next few lines differ only in the order of their letters (shar' shir') so also the words for verse and idol resemble each other (bait but)

² In reality they are utterly foreign for religion is extolled and poetry according to 'The poets—those follow them who go astray (Qur 26 224) is condemned although in this age they are on an equality i.e. the foundations of religion are destroyed by the corruption of the times and religion like poetry has lost its basis and support. If however when he says they are now on the same level he is referring to his own poetry full of truth and the knowledge of God then the idea is one of praise not blame. L. B adds the saying "Poets are the disciples of the Merciful"

i.e. religion and poetry. Whatso is permitted to us i.e. to the people who have only an exoteric knowledge of religion (اعمال ظاهر شرع), is unlawful for one who is far removed from this and that i.e. worldly concerns. For 'The good deeds of the pious are the evil deeds of those who are brought near to God' and true it is that those things which the people of externals regard as right for them selves are forbidden to the perfected. L. I give this note because of I s author ity. I think however that us refers to the adepts and that consequently the meaning is the exact opposite of this v. note on next line.

³ i.e. counts worldly gain and ease as an injury and a wound those who are at peace in the path of religion and truth what have they to do with these things? I. The idea of this line is what the author appears to have been lead ing up to—that only the man who regards earthly things as an encumbrance can judge of what is allowable or improper introducing the idea by reminding us that poetry is condemned by a strict religion he follows up the idea further in the succeeding line then he asserts that he himself being above these restrictions may write poetry while others on a lower plane are debarred therefrom and ends with the general assertion of the present line.

The passage concludes with a line. Kindness towards thine enemy is wisdom for heaven lays up for thee thy good or evil fame which occurring in this place will serve again to illustrate the extraordinary confusion into which the text has fallen.

³ "Since Reason and Soul cannot themselves arrive at its true essence they hold others back too" so L who is however doubtful as to the explanation, adding "And God knows best if this is right"

⁴ The Qur'ān has always by orthodox Muslims been held to be inimitable in style and many passages of the Qur'ān itself such as the one incorporated in the title of the present section are adduced in support of this view Cf also Qur 11 16 where Muhammad challenges his opponents to bring ten sūras and 2 21 and 10 39 where he challenges them to bring one sūra like it Cf also on this subject Hughes Dict of Islam s v Quran sects. - 10 O thou to whom, by reason of thy heedlessness and sin, in reading the Qur'ān there comes upon thy tongue no sweetness from its words, into thy heart no yearning from their comprehension,—by its exceeding majesty and authority the Qur'ān, with argument and proof, is in its inner meaning the light of the high road of Islām, in its outward significance the guardian of the tenets of the multitude, life's sweetness to the wise, to the heedless but a recitation on the 15 tongue,—phrases upon their tongue whose sweetness they cannot taste, while careless of their spirit and design

There is an eye which sees the spirit of the Qur'ān, and an eye which sees the letter,²—for this the bodily eye, for that the eye of the soul, the body, through the ear, carries away the melody of its words the soul, by its perceptive power feeds on the delights of its spirit For strangers the curtains of majesty are drawn together in darkness before its loveliness,³ the curtain and the chamberlain know

¹ The words of the Qur'ān vivify and preserve the soul of the believer and similarly its precepts both positive and negative, are an ornament to the wheel of the faith for unless a wheel have a tower its results and workings and act and effect are not evidenced in the world in the way designed and so it is with the precepts of the Qur'ān without which the faith possesses not the necessary appliances for success ' B

If it had seen thee to be worthy, it would have rent this subtle veil and shown its face to thee, and there thy soul might have found rest, for it heals 10 the wounded heart, and medicines the disappointed soul,² the body tastes the flavour of the dregs that it may live, the soul knows the taste of the oil.³

What can sense see, but that the outward form is good? What there is within, wisdom knows. Thou recitest the form of its sūras, and its true nature thou knowest not, but know, that to him who truly reads the Qur'ān, the feast it gives comes not short of the guest-house of Paradise. It has made the letter its veil, because it is to be 15 concealed from alien eyes, material existence knows naught of its inmost soul,—know, its body is one thing, its soul a thing apart, from its outward form thou seest but so much as do the common men from the appearance of a king.⁴

Why deemest thou that the words are the Qur'ān? What crude discourse is thine concerning it? Though the letter is its bed fellow, it knows it not, no more than the figures on the bath,⁵ nor do 20

Though the written characters are not of the word, the scent of Yūsuf is in his garment, the fair Yūsuf was cast away in Egypt, but the scent reached Ya'qūb in Canaan. The letter of the Qur'ān is to its 15 sense as thy clothes to thy life, the letter may be uttered by the tongue, its soul can be read but by the soul. The letter is as the shell, the true Qur'ān the pearl, the heart of the free-born desires not the shell. Though its words are fair and finely traced, though the mountain becomes as carded wool before them,¹ make music of them in thy heart like Moses, not outwardly like the treble of the pipes. thou canst not so till thou reverencest the written lines of the Qur'ān thou wilt not obtain the jewel of true religion B This however does not explain the connection of the second hemistich and I think ایمان is to be taken in a less restricted sense as trust confidence the written words of the Qur'ān are as the shores by which one approaches a feeling of trustfulness and security or the Qur'ān itself gives ease to heart and soul

15 is there between evil and good ? In the letter of the Qur'ān is no healing for thy soul,—the goat grows not fat on the goatherd's call, nor soon nor late the water of his dream satisfies the thirsty one in his helplessness Thou, who art in thralldom to pen and ink,¹ canst not distinguish between face and veil, in the world of the Word at least,² the word's outward characters³ are not esteemed to be its life

When thou settest foot in that country⁴ He will teach thee the 20 alphabet of sincerity, and when thou shalt recite the alphabet of the faith thou shalt know sun and Pleiades for thy father and ancestors,⁵ such is the way of the loyal followers, and such too is the alphabet of the lovers

Dark is the veil on the face of day, the verse of its conceits is 92 very subtle⁶ If thou wouldst have a treasure for thy soul and heart, recite with heart and soul a verse from it, that in it thou mayest find the jewel of the truth, the essential basis of thy faith⁷ that thou mayest find the casket of the incomparable pearl, and know the pure gold from the silver,⁸ that glorious as the sun and moon there may appear to thee from behind the dark screen its own beautiful face, like a bride who comes forth lovely and joyous from out her gauzy veil

⁸ All the texts here insert a line "What are the caskets? the divine secrets. What is in them? the spiritual mystery" which I think is a gloss, since it interrupts the sequence of lines beginning with U, speaks of 'caskets' in the plural, and practically identifies the casket and the pearl it contains.

OF THE GUIDANCE OF THE QUR'ĀN

It is the guide, and the lovers the travellers, it is a rope, and the heedless sit in the pit Thy soul has its home at the pit's bottom, the Qur'ān's light is a rope let down to it, rise and seize the rope, so thou mayest haply find salvation, else thou art lost in the pit's depth,— 10 flood and storm¹ will destroy thee Like Yūsuf thou art brought by Satan into the pit, be thy wisdom the glad tidings,² thy rope the Qur'ān, if thou desirest to be as Yūsuf, and to enjoy high place, take hold of it and come forth from the well

The wise use the rope to obtain the water of life, but thou makest ready thy rope to dance on it for daily bread³ No one learns two letters 15 of the Qur'ān in a thousand centuries with such an eye as thine, the understanding's arm turns about as does a wheel, body and soul are captives of thy passions⁴ If thou desirest throne and crown and honour, why sittest thou for ever at the well's bottom? Thy Yūsuf⁵ is helpless in the well, thy heart reciting the sūra 'safah',⁶ make of sorrow a rope of thy sighs a bucket, and draw up thy Yūsuf from the well

15 THE COMPARISON OF THE CREATION OF ADAM AND OF JESUS
SON OF MARY (ON BOTH OF WHOM BE PEACE ¹) ²

Adam's father in this world was the same breath which begot the son of Mary ³ that which became his body was of the nature of humanity, and that which became his soul was of the fragrance of that breath Whoso has in him that breath is an Adam and whoso has it not, is an effigy belonging to this world only When Adam received that breath from the power of God his soul became conscious, 20 and hastening towards the Universal Soul he asked, "What canst thou tell me of this breath?" Soul replied, My cup and robe are empty my robe and cup hold naught of it —this precious gift has been given freely ⁴

Wheresoever thou wilt incline, let it be in accordance with this 98 breath, incline not towards thyself in opposition to it, and soar above the snares of earth, gaining the abode of Godhead, viewing the confines of the spirit-land, like Jesus, with the eye of thy divinity

Claim no distinction for thyself in thy village, for thou art only distinguished in that to be naught is better than such distinction

² As the crackling noise made by a lamp denotes watered oil so by the noise of laughter a falsely professing spiritual man is exposed

Contrasting, the sighs of the falsely professing with those of the true Lover the former only serve to obscure the path as breathing on glass obscures its brightness

³ Cf Qur 3 52 Verily the likeness of Jesus with God is as the likeness of Adam He created him from earth then He said to him BE and he was

⁴ The commentators refer to Qur 4 168 The Messiah Jesus the son of Mary is but the apostle of God and His Word which He cast into Mary and a spirit from Him believe then in God and His apostles and say not Three Have done ' it were better for you God is only one God celebrated be His praise that He

Like a dot on the die used as a tool of the game thou thinkest thyself to be something, but that something is naught, thou art indeed a unit, but like the dots on the dice hast a name merely for purposes of counting

Fortunate is he who has effaced himself from the world,¹ none seeks him nor seeks he anyone. Whoso is caught in the bonds of this world, is a gainer if he escape from its forces, for this world is the source of pain and sorrow, and the wise man calls it the house of lodging. Since in the light of reason and clear sight two flights at the proper time are as good as three victories,² so thou, O full of excellencies, art a fool, if at this river thou stayest on the bridge or in the cave.³

Let the guide of thy bodily and of thy spiritual life be for this world wisdom, for the other thy faith. fortunate is he whose guide is wisdom, for both worlds are his submissive servants. When the fruition of desire is attained, the go-between's talk becomes a heaviness, though she sets the business going, yet when the closet is reached she is only a bore to thee.⁴

Abraha rode on an elephant an animal rarely seen in Arabia from which the expedition afterwards took its name The Meccans unable to oppose Abraha's army at its approach retired to the neighbouring mountains but the elephant refused to advance against the town and at the same time a large flock of birds flew over the host each carrying three small stones one in its bill and one in each of its claws which they allowed to fall on the heads of the army This occasioned the rout of the army Cf Qur 105 and the commentators thereupon
